Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"The Electrician"

New TV Sitcom Is Being Pitched In Hollywood With Little Chance Of Success

By Dan Rattiner

It was a hot day in Hollywood. Outside, not even a hint of a breeze stirred the palm trees. Inside, where an overhead fan stirred the air, talent agent Ed Casey adjusted the collar of his Hawaiian shirt. The buzzer on his desk rang and he punched a button.

"Who is it?" he asked his secretary.

"That sitcom guy from New York, the one with 'The Electrician.'"

"Tell him I'm busy."

"He says it's important. Wants to see you. He has a new chapter."

Casey sighed. "Well, all right. If I have to."

The door banged open. The writer, as he was last visit, was all disheveled and excited. The sweat beads stood out on his forehead.

"Daniel Pelosi is going to jail."

"What?"

"Look. It's perfect. My new episode. He's been sentenced to jail for a year in Riverhead. He reports in February. And until then he is on parole. And it has nothing to do with the murder."

"I told you this needs work. It's not ready."

"I know. I know. But look how this fits in. Let me go over it."

"Do you have to?"

"First episode. It's 2001. The electrician is hired to do some wiring in the wealthy East Hampton home of a New York financier named Ammon. He lives in a working-class neighborhood nearby, called Manorville. Wife and three kids. And he falls in love with Ammon's wife."

"How could I forget."

"So he takes up with her. And Ammon finds out something — but he doesn't know what — is up with his wife so he has the electrician put a burglar alarm in his house. Only Ammon and the electrician know the code. And Ammon doesn't know that what's up is his wife and the electrician. So then in the middle of the night somebody sneaks in, all we see is a shadow, and hits Ammon in the head with a blunt object while he's sleeping. Kills him. Turns out Ammon and his wife were negotiating a divorce. They have an estate in England, a town house in Manhattan, a second town house in Manhattan and this murder scene in East Hampton. The wife's living in one of the town houses, redecorating it. Ammon lives in the other town house and spends weekends at the East Hampton house. They are just a few days away from signing divorce papers when Ammon is killed. End of episode two.

Pelosi's going to jail – for driving drunk

By BRIAN HARMON
DAILY NEWS STAFF WRITER

The Long Island electrician who married financier Ted Ammon's widow three months after the Manhattan man was bludgeoned to death is going to jail — for DWI.

Danny Pelosi admitted yesterday to driving drunk in Ammon's BMW in East Hampton, L.I., on Sept. 16, 2001, violating his probation from a 1998 DWI conviction.

Pelosi, decked out in a gray suit and slicked-back hair, pleaded guilty in exchange for a promised one-year jail term.

"That's a one-year sentence — less four months [for time served]?" Pelosi confirmed with Judge Stephen Braslow at Suffolk County Court in Riverhead.

The judge agreed — and then sternly warned Pelosi not to miss any meetings with his probation officer before he is officially sentenced Feb. 11.

Pelosi is accused of missing eight probation meetings since the start of 2001.

The contractor "failed to meet the minimum standards of probation, and he should be incarcerated," said Robert Clifford, spokesman for Suffolk District Attorney Thomas Spota.

Prosecutors wanted Pelosi, 38, in jail because cops view him as a potential suspect in last year's murder of Ammon, law enforcement sources close to the case said.

Wealthy wife's ailing

With Pelosi off the streets, witnesses may be more likely to come forward with information, the sources said.

Pelosi heads to the slammer as his wife, Generosa Ammon, 46, grows gravely ill from ovarian cancer, sources said. Pelosi — along with their two children — stands to inherit most of the Ammon estate, valued at $80 million to $350 million.

Ted Ammon, 52, a bank investor who brokered billions worth of deals during his 20 years on Wall Street, was slain in October 2001 in his Middle Lane mansion in East Hampton.

He was embroiled in bitter di*vorce proceedings with Genero*sa over money and custody of the couple's adopted twins, now 12.

Generosa and Pelosi wed in January in Queens and temporarily moved with the children to England before settling in Pelosi's hometown, Center Moriches, L.I.

DWI PLEA Dan Pelosi manages smile outside court.

"Episode three. Ammon's wife is a widow. She's going to inherit $90 million dollars. She flees the country, taking her kids to the estate in England. She also takes the electrician, whom she marries in a hurry-up ceremony just before they leave and just two days after his wife (with the kids in Manorville) signs divorce papers saying he is an abusive drunk with a bad temper problem."

"This plot is so lame," the agent says, putting his head in his hands. "Do I really have to hear this?"

"Episode four. The police can't find the killer. There's no murder weapon. No fingerprints. Then it turns out the electrician has numerous Driving While Intoxicated charges against him in New York State, has been on parole, has failed to show up to see his parole officer, has violated parole by going gambling in Atlantic City, and has missed all sorts of court appearances. He's a wanted man. So the electrician returns to America, renting a house in Moriches, to face the music. The judge confiscates his passport. Now it turns out he's got a new DWI charge, one he got weaving all over the road while driving Ammon's Mercedes a month before the murder. He has to appear in court in East Hampton, but he fails to show up there either.

"Episode five."

"I know," the agent says. "The real estate episode."

"Right. The widow Ammon in England has a cash problem. The estate is still in probate. And she's got all these bills to pay. She sells a commercial parcel of land she owns in East Hampton

— it had been a Buick dealership — to the town for $3 million and they knock down the building and make it part of the Town Green. Then she sells one of the two Manhattan town houses for $6 million. She puts the big murder house up for sale for $12 million. And suddenly she finds a buyer and sells the English mansion for another bunch of millions. She says the British press has been hounding her and her kids. She moves in with her husband in Moriches. The kids will go to the Moriches schools. End of Episode five.

"Episode six. Mrs. Ammon is diagnosed with cancer. Big time cancer. She may not live. If she dies, her husband gets the Ammon millions. But he's nursing her as best he can. Meanwhile, now it's a year since the murder and the police investigating the murder, still without any evidence, kick the lead detective upstairs and replace him with a new lead detective. But nothing changes. The electrician goes to court, pleads not guilty to the latest DWI charge, says he was not driving, but was sleeping in the back and somebody else was driving. The cops say they saw him leap over the front seat and pretend he was sleeping in the back and nobody else was there."

"So why does the electrician go to jail?" the agent asks, looking up blankly.

"He changes his plea. Could have got up to seven years with all the other DWI charges. He pleads guilty, admits he was driving, and will serve one year in jail, but wants to start in February so he can have time with his wife. Judge agrees to this."

"So what's episode Eight? He gets the $90 million?"

"Exactly," the man shouts. "He builds a big house on the ocean. Goes to all the right parties. And they never find out who killed Ammon."

"I have one question," the agent says. "Who the hell is going to believe all this?"

"That's the whole point," the writer says. "This is a Job-like experience for the electrician. Everything points to him. He gets all the bad publicity on account of it. Yet HE DIDN'T DO IT. And so in the end, after going through all this angst, he joins the jet set. And lives happily ever after. How many more episodes do I need here?"

The agent punches the intercom. "Agnes, isn't my next appointment here?"

"No, Mr. Casey."

"Well, tell him just another minute." He turns to the writer. "Look, gotta go, gotta go." He gets up. Puts his arm around the writer's shoulder and leads him to the door. "Keep working on this. Maybe you got something here. A little nub, a little kernel. Something. But I'm not quite seeing it yet. Do another episode. Keep in touch. And don't use the name Pelosi. A woman with the name Pelosi just became the Minority Leader for the Democrats in the Senate. It'll throw people off. Try Job, something that rhymes with Job. Jobinski. McJob. Jobian. Keep at it."

Casey pushes the writer out, slams the door.

"I can't stand this," he says, leaning heavily against it. Now he returns to his desk and punches the intercom. "Agnes, no more calls for awhile." •

British Man O' War Blows American Experimental Submarine To Kingdom Come

By Dan Rattiner

During the War of 1812, the British Navy sent a fleet to blockade the eastern ports of the United States to prevent any commerce between that fledgling country and the rest of the world. More than 40 British warships came to Northeast harbors, eight of which sailed down Long Island Sound to block one entrance to New York Harbor. The U.S. warships Hornet, United States and Macedonian sailed to meet them, not realizing until it was too late the strength of the British fleet. The Hornet escaped but the other two ended up trapped in a New London port until the war ended in December of 1814 with the signing of thr Treaty of Ghent.

*   *   *

Although no full scale battle was waged on the waters of Long Island Sound during this war, a little known shipwreck did result in a small battle that caused the demise of an entirely new sort of military vessel, a seagoing submersible vessel towing torpedoes, called the Turtle. It went aground on a beach in Southold on June 19, 1814 and caused the only bombardment by the British of anything on eastern Long Island either before or since.

> They also sent out a few fishing vessels... to harass and fire upon the British ships, but this was a minor harrassment. Britain ruled the seas.

In New York in the early spring of 1814, the generals of the American Army were trying to think of anything they could do to disrupt the British blockade. They had no hope of breaking the blockade because all they had left was this one warship, the Hornet, and a few privateers. They also sent out a few fishing vessels with men with muskets to harass and fire upon the British ships, but this was a minor business. Britain ruled the seas.

On the other hand, New York was a thriving town filled with many entrepreneurs and inventors. One of them was Robert Fulton, already in his mid-forties, who had succeeded in developing the first commercially successful steamboat. (A reporter in a New York paper described it as "resembling a backwoods saw-mill mounted on a scow and set on fire.") He had by this time ten steamboats plying the Hudson between docks on the west side of Manhattan and Albany. (He received a patent for this route!) He had other steamboats, twin-hulled ferry boats with double ends, plying back and forth across the Hudson. And with the money he made, he had become a very rich man by 1812. At that time, with war having broken out, the United States government earmarked $5,000 for Fulton to build the world's first steam-powered warship. It was a huge undertaking. 300 feet long and 200 feet wide, the Demologos was double-hulled, had paddles between the inner and outer hulls, and was powered by a 120-horsepower steam engine. It had 44 guns on deck and several underwater cannons. But, by 1814, it was still under construction. As a matter of fact, with the war ending later that year, it was never finished. With peace at hand, the Navy terminated its funding.

Fulton had invented special torpedoes, however. And he had developed a keen interest in submarines. As a young man, with a letter of introduction from Benjamin Franklin, whose portrait he had painted, Fulton had gone from New York to Paris to study art. He abandoned that, however, and in his late twenties, now interested in submarines, spent half a dozen years trying to interest either the French or the English in a special submersible warship he had designed. It was steam powered — Fulton, contrary to popular belief, did not invent the steam engine, only refined it —and with a crew of ten, could drop below the surface of the sea and approach an enemy ship without being seen. He demonstrated a prototype "plunging boat," as he called it, to the French, staying underwater for 17 minutes, but they turned him away. He then went to London to interest the English, promising if he sold it to them he would not sell it to the French. He took one of his prototypes, the Nautilus, out on the waters known as Walmer Roads, and, using a torpedo, attacked and destroyed the Danish brig Dorothea as a test before the Prime Minister. But the British turned him down, too.

One English Lord had this to say about Prime Minister William Pitt and the time he had "wasted" on Fulton.

"Pitt was the greatest fool who ever lived to encourage a mode of war which they who commanded the seas did not want, and which, if successful, would deprive them of it."

In any case, Fulton, reported in the New York Press as an upstart American inventor abroad, returned to America a hero in 1806. After his aforementioned success in this endeavor, it was natural in 1814, when he began his design for a steamboat, for the U.S. Navy to turn to him to come up with something with which to fight the British.

I have done considerable research on this story, and have been unable to find any connection between Fulton and the twelve-man submersible called the Turtle, that was to be involved with the skirmish with the British Navy at Southold in 1814. The ship had been something quickly cobbled together in New York — 23 feet long, only a curved wooden deck protected with copper sheathing visible on the surface of the water, with the twelve men inside turning hand cranks to make it go. But the torpedoes it carried came straight from the Fulton's Demologus construction site. They were self-propelled wooden tubes with dynamite packed into their iron tips. They were towed behind the Turtle on a barge because there were few people who thought it a good idea to have them inside with the twelve men. To deploy them, the men could pull ropes that released them. The torpedoes would then head off toward their targets.

On April 17, for a training mission, the Turtle, with just the metal curve of its iron sheathing showing above the waves, went off towing the torpedoes into Long Island Sound and, after 20 miles, turned back and returned to Manhattan, a successful trial completed.

Another crew took the Turtle out again on June 19 intending to make it to New London, but this time they got only as far as Southold on the North Fork of eastern Long Island. Scooting along about a half mile offshore, the Turtle ran into a squall, and the men lost control of it. Soon, after being tossed about in high seas, the Turtle came ashore on the beach at Southold. The men opened the top hatch, climbed out, and surveyed the damage. There wasn't any.

Local farmers from Southold came upon the men on the beach, and an attempt was made to push it back into the sea, which failed. It was then decided that the Turtle should be destroyed. It could fall into enemy hands. And with the towing barge still attached, though the torpedoes were lost, the British might be able to use it against them.

Trouble was, however, that the farmers and the twelve crew members lacked the tools to destroy the Turtle. They tried firing a few shots at it from muskets, but it did no damage. So then several men were sent off to get help, while the rest remained to guard the ship. That night, the guards slept in a farmhouse, then returned to the beach in the morning. As for the others, they didn't return. After another day, the remaining crew simply abandoned the Turtle there, with some of them heading back to New York and some of them remaining at the farm.

One week later, the Turtle was exactly where they had left it. And so it was that on June 26, the men saw the alarming sight of two British vessels, apparently on a routine cruise coming down the Sound, stop and turn to head toward the Turtle. The men got muskets and headed down to the beach. Shots rang out. One of the Americans, 67-year-old Noah Terry, a local farmer, defiantly stood up on the top of the Turtle and waved his hat at the British. Hit me if you can, he yelled.

The British tried, firing cannons, and ultimately Terry and the others ran off. But the British had gotten the idea. And seeing this strange vessel, proceeded to do what the Americans could not. With their powerful cannons, in a matter of hours, they reduced the Turtle to rubble. It would serve no

David Lion Rattiner Prowls The Streets Of New York With His Cell Phone

By Dan Rattiner

Regular readers of this newspaper will have noticed by now that there is another person with the last name Rattiner — David Lion Rattiner — who is writing for Dan's Papers. Last winter he wrote a column called AWAY AT SCHOOL and from June to September he wrote a weekly column called HOME FOR THE SUMMER. They will have surmised, correctly, and that he is a college boy, that he is my son and he was here for the summer. At the present time he is writing a column called OFF TO NEW YORK, which has led some people to wonder, well, did he flunk out?

The answer is, frankly, no, but this fall he is on an internship for MTV in the Viacom Building in Times Square. I see him often. In January he will be going back to college.

How he got the internship is interesting. He was writing a story for the paper about a party for MTV given at Gurney's Inn in Montauk this past summer and one thing led to another and they offered him this internship in their sales department for the fall. This is a dream internship for any college student. Hundreds of people apply there and don't get them. On the other hand, MTV doesn't pay anything. But David does get college credit.

A few weeks ago, David got into a dispute with one of his supervisors and was told to come in the following morning. He was sure he was going to be fired.

We debated what he ought to tell them in the event they wanted to fire him. You should tell them, I said, that you have only three weeks to complete the internship and you need the credit at college. You should tell them you've rented an apartment in Manhattan and you need the money to honor your commitment there.

"They're not paying me."

> I pressed him about where the main entrance was and he said, "just pick an entrance and I'll call you on the cell phone and we'll meet up."

"Right. So you could go out and get a job. No, that won't work."

Turned out they had no intention of firing him. Lesson learned was, don't worry about something until you have to.

"They couldn't fire me because they don't pay me," he said.

"Whatever."

Last Wednesday I went into the city to see the Broadway show Movin' Out by Twyla Tharp based on the music of Billy Joel. I had a dinner date at 6 beforehand, but I could meet David at 5 for a drink. I called him on the cell phone around 11 that morning. Sure, he said, just be in front of the Viacom Building at 5. I pressed him about where the main entrance was and he said, "just pick an entrance and I'll call you on the cell phone and we'll meet up."

It's amazing how quickly young people have mastered cell phone use. In the old days, you'd give somebody elaborate directions. The front of the building was on the west side of Broadway between 44th and 45th Street. Stand in front of the revolving doors.Can't miss it.

Today, all you have to do is get close to the building. The cell phone does the rest. Here's how we met up.

RING.

"Where are you?"

"I'm under an awning of a restaurant called Charley O's. It's in the back of the Viacom Building."

"Stay right there."

RING.

"Where are you again?"

"Under an awning of a restaurant called Charley O's."

"You're breaking up. I'll call back."

RING.

"Mario's?"

"Charley O's. I'm looking across at the Schubert Theatre."

"Stay there."

RING.

"I don't know any Mario's."

"Charley O's."

"Spell it."

And so forth and so on.

Anyway we finally linked up. He knew I had a six o'clock dinner. We went into Charley O's and sat down and he said, "think they have any fish on the menu?" This is a son's prerogative. I watched him eat. He's six three and a half and a hundred and ninety pounds. A twenty-year-old human furnace. The fish with the vegetable and rice vanished in seconds.

Incidentally, his name really is David Lion Rattiner. I figured if he grew up to be an accountant or a dentist he could be David Rattiner. If he grew up to be a playwright or a rock star he could be Lion Rattiner.

I named him after Lion Gardiner, who founded the English colony in what was to become New York State. This was in 1639. I figured if the name was good enough for somebody with an English background back then, it would be good enough for somebody with a Scottish, Christian, English, Romanian, Jewish and Lithuanian background today.

I also think he writes better than me, but I'm prejudiced. •

And In Court The Guy Who Did It Gets Slapped On The Wrist

By Dan Rattiner

About five hundred cases a year go through our local town justice court in each of our small towns. Most are never reported on. Occasionally, however, a case happens where the story of it just demands to be told. This is one of them. An angry man, using whatever he had at hand, caused thousands of dollars worth of damage to another man's parked car. The judge, when presented with the obvious physical facts, ruled for the plaintiff. But the fine was just a token one: $100. Case closed.

The location of the incident was in the private parking lot behind 66 Newtown Lane in East Hampton on a Saturday, July 20. The man whose car was beaten up was Erick Corneille. The man who beat up the car was Mike Marcari. Before the trial, an offer was made, by Corneille, to drop all the charges in exchange for $2,900 from Marcari. (The maximum in small claims court that a judge can award is just $3,000.) But for Marcari, there would also be legal fees. He had hired a lawyer to defend him since there were also criminal charges. Marcari declined the offer. And so, like a Judge Judy case on TV, the case proceeded.

> The recourse available for a private parking lot owner historically is a big sign that read PRIVATE LOT. VIOLATORS WILL BE TOWED...

The facts of the case were quickly established. Marcari had gone to work that morning at a shop in the 66 Newtown Lane complex called the Beauty Clinic, where he still works. Two weeks prior to July 20, someone had broken into his car and stolen a videotape and his employee parking permit. He had reported the loss to the police. And he had also applied to a company called C.E.T. Services for a temporary permit to continue to be able to park there for the rest of the summer. C.E.T. only issues a certain number of permanent permits, but they obliged him. On the morning of July 20, Marcari had the permit clearly displayed on the dashboard of his car. He locked the car and he went to work.

A little needs to be said about C.E.T. As you know, parking space in most of our downtowns is at a premium, and it is regulated by the police officers from the villages, including a group of traffic officers who put chalk on tires to see to it that nobody parks longer than they should.

On the other hand, there are private parking lots. And for these lots, the police do not have jurisdiction unless they are called in and a complaint filed. They do not enforce civil complaints that belong in a courtroom. And that includes people parking in the private lots when the owner does not want them to. The recourse available for a private parking lot owner historically is a big sign that read PRIVATE LOT. VIOLATORS WILL BE TOWED AT OWNER'S EXPENSE. People who parked there anyway did so at their own risk.

Into this mix two years ago came a newly-created firm called C.E.T., which was hired by private lot owners to put metal boots on the wheels of illegally parked cars in those lots. The cost to get them removed — to get a guy to turn a key in a lock to free up your car — was originally set at $216, later reduced to $135. To their discredit, in my opinion, six private parking lot owners in East Hampton hired C.E.T., as did private lot owners in Sag Harbor and Southampton. One such owner that hired C.E.T. owned and still owns the lot at 66 Newtown Lane. Corneille, who is 20 years old, was working for C.E.T. on July 20 when his car was beaten up.

At the end of his workday at 5 p.m. Marcari came out of the Beauty Clinic to find that, in spite of the temporary permit on his dashboard issued by C.E.T., a boot had been placed on his tire. Who put the boot there was not hard to determine. C.E.T. requires that their employees remain in the lots all day so they can be available when the people come out and find their cars immobilized. Money then changes hands. The boot is removed. The transaction is over.

Corneille got out of his car and wandered over. He had the key. He also had a video camera and a Polaroid camera, provided to him by C.E.T. so that in the event of trouble C.E.T. can prevail in court.

"I have a temporary permit in my window as you can see," Marcari said. "It was issued by your company."

"Once the boot is on, it doesn't come off until you pay $135. Put your complaint in writing," Corneille allegedly told him.

Marcari then allegedly caused several thousand dollars worth of damage to Corneille's car. Corneille then called the police and filed a charge of harassment. And that's how they wound up in a courtroom.

Part of the case included a cross examination of Corneille by Marcari's lawyer. During the questioning, the following was learned. Corneille had been unemployed before being hired by C.E.T. for the summer. He was using his own car. They paid him no salary, but instead paid him $20 for every car he put a boot on. He got the $20 even if he booted a car in error. One week he booted 50 cars and made $1000.

The judge ruled Corneille guilty of harassment, a misdemeanor. The fine, closing the case, as I said, was $100.

The business practices of C.E.T. have been suspect since they first contracted with the lot owners two years ago. For one thing, the business was started by a Detective Larsen who has a full time job with the East Hampton Town Police force. Reportedly, he sold his interest in the business, but he did not do this until his connection with it was made public.

The original price charged to get the boot off your car, $216, was arrived at because it matched what a tow truck would charge to tow your car away. This, however, was turning a key in a lock. Anybody could see this. People saw it as gouging. And so after the first year they lowered it to $135, which still seems like a lot of money.

The whole business of immobilizing someone's car in a private lot was completely foreign to both this area and to the American sense of fairness. That the booters accepted no explanations and no excuses — a need to take a pregnant woman to the hospital fell on deaf ears by C.E.T. "policy" — was maddening and possibly illegal. It all smacked of a kind of Wild West justice. Hand over the money, or else. And it gave the villages a bad name.

This newspaper has reported several cases where people became violent when faced with a boot on their car. George Plimpton, the author and raconteur who lives in Amagansett, became so angry that he kicked and destroyed the C.E.T. sign that explained the private lot rules, then walked off telling the booter to keep his car.

Andrew Baker, who owns the Sag Harbor Music Store, reacted to being booted in a lot in East Hampton by stomping with all his might on the boot, breaking both the boot and a bone in his foot. Later that day, after he drove off with the booting employee running after him snapping Polaroids, got x-rays and his foot attended to, he was visited by officers of the East Hampton Village Police, who said he would have to pay not only for his ticket but for the value of the boot he destroyed.

And in this case, it turns out in open court that Corneille, the C.E.T. employee in the 66 Newtown Lane lot, was working under the same rules as a bounty hunter. Bring one in. Get the money.

Now it is C.E.T.'s turn to get the boot. It has been announced that on December 31, when the contracts between C.E.T. and the lot owners in East Hampton Village come to an end, they will not be renewed. Mayor Rickenbach, who henceforth is to be addressed as "Sheriff," has responded to his constituency and, after announcing an ethics investigation of all of this, has negotiated to get the "outlaws" out of town.

One hopes that Sag Harbor and Southampton, which have C.E.T. contracts in two lots and one lot respectively, will follow suit.

There are better ways to deal with illegally parked cars. It is not rocket science. And it is not C.E.T. •

How Bishop Won

Nine Days After The Election, Grucci Concedes In Bishop's Upset Victory

By Jerry Cimisi

It was surely one of the biggest political upsets in the country: Southampton College Provost Timothy Bishop, a Democrat, has narrowly defeated incumbent Republican Congressman Felix Grucci — by a margin of about 3,000 votes out of a total of 160,000 votes cast.

The vote was so close that even by the morning after Election Day, with Bishop leading by 2,421 votes, there was some possibility that the tally of absentee ballots (5,689 votes) could put Grucci back on top; and so the incumbent Congressman was not about to concede.

At that point, the tally read: 80,886 votes for Bishop; 78,465 for Grucci — 50 percent to 49 percent. Lorna Salzman, Green Party candidate, drew one percent of the vote.

But more than one week later, with absentee ballots slightly increasing Bishop's lead, Grucci conceded. "I don't look back with any regret," he said about the campaign. And yet, he might well have done things differently. At least one particular thing. More on that in a moment.

Bishop's strong showing in the First Congressional District has the pundits shaking their heads. In this past election, the Republican Party made great strides. They now control both the House and the Senate. In fact, not for sixty-eight years, since 1934, has a midterm election gone so well for the party of the sitting president (that year, it was Democrat FDR). And yet, in the First District, in which registered Republicans dominate, political newcomer Tim Bishop took on an incumbent Congressman, Felix Grucci, who had also been Brookhaven Town supervisor, a town that comprises 60 percent of the First District, and won. It was the first time since 1960 that a challenging Democrat unseated an incumbent Republican in the First District — when Riverhead Justice of the Peace Otis Pike defeated Stuyvasent Wainwright of Wainscott.

Certainly from the outset the figures seemed against Bishop. In the First District, that stretches from Kings Park in Western Suffolk, to Montauk Point, the easternmost point of Long Island, there are 158,000 registered Republicans, 102,000 Democrats, and 38,000 third party voters. That is slightly more than a 3-2 Republican-Democrat ratio.

On Bishop's side, however, were the 103,000 voters registered as independent. This is obviously a big pool to be tapped, a pool that must be tapped by an underdog.

It was considered that Bishop, from the East End of the Island, would do well in those towns — and he did. Of the five East End towns — Southold, Riverhead, Shelter Island, Southampton and East Hampton, he lost only Riverhead.

How could a political newcomer run such a strong campaign against one seasoned in Long Island politics?

But what was not expected was that Bishop would beat Grucci on the latter's home turf Brookhaven Town, whose population is actually larger than two states. Bishop's victory there was only by a few hundred votes, but it is certainly a surprise that Bishop did so well in a town in which Grucci has lived all his life, in which his world famous family fireworks business is based, in which he served two terms as Town Supervisor before getting elected to Congress in 2000.

The two towns in which Grucci easily beat Bishop were Smithtown, by 54 to 48 percent, and Riverhead, 55-45 percent.

How could a political newcomer run such a strong campaign against one seasoned in Long Island politics?

Here's what Grucci probably does regret: More than a few observers say he shot himself in the foot with the now infamous "rape" ad, which claimed that Bishop, as Provost of LIU Southampton, turned his back on a victim of rape on the campus and tried to cover up the incident.

Early in the 1990's the students' newspaper at Southampton LIU ran two articles alleging an administrative coverup of rape on campus. A faculty advisor had ordered one issue of the paper pulled from the stands in fear that it might be libelous.

Investigation by various media sources could find no substance in any allegations that Bishop covered up anything.

The Grucci ad featured a woman's voice saying that Bishop had overseen a coverup of the rape. In outrage over the ad, Southampton College brought a $6 million lawsuit against Grucci and succeeded in obtaining a preliminary injunction to halt the ad. The injunction was overturned by the Appellate Court, that said the ad could be run, but with all reference to Southampton College removed.

A counsel for the Grucci campaign said it was obvious that LIU was acting as a surrogate for the Bishop campaign.

At any rate, the fallout from the ad did not do Grucci any good. A Southampton College official who had been for Grucci, switched allegiance and donated a hefty sum to Bishop's campaign. In fact, it is estimated that the ad resulted in a half million dollars being donated to the Bishop campaign.

The money had to be a lifesaver for Bishop, for he was still greatly outspent by Grucci. As of November 4, Grucci had raised $1.1 million and had spent $975,796. Bishop had raised $691,398 and had spent $532,622. About 86 percent of Bishop's funds came from individual donors, while half of Grucci's money came from

Political Action Committees.

Another thing that hurt Grucci was the dissemination, by the Bishop campaign, of a Suffolk County Department of Health report revealing that Grucci's firework's company had polluted the drinking water of an area in Yaphank. There was no indication that the company knew it was polluting the water. But this could only be a big plus for Bishop, who ran strong on the environment.

Of course most candidates claim to be environmentalists now. While Grucci was Supervisor of Brookhaven, the town established it's first Environmental Property Trust Fund, and an Environmental Bond Act raised $10 million dollars for the preservation of land.

On the other hand, the League of Conservation Voters endorsed Bishop and gave Grucci the lowest rating of any New York State member of Congress.

And when it came to endorsements, newcomer Bishop did quite well. He was supported by The New York Times, Newsday, the American Postal Workers Union, United Auto Workers, American Federation of Government Employees and the local bricklayers and boilermakers unions — among many other groups.

The endorsement from the Times cited disappointment in the Grucci ad about the alleged rape and coverup, calling it a "scurrilous attack that was supposed to help him with women voters but instead infuriated both women and many men whose support he needed in the race." The Times also felt that Bishop was a stronger environmental candidate than Grucci, citing the pollution by his family's fireworks company.

Timothy Bishop grew up in Southampton. He was named Provost of the college there in 1986. His family has been in Southampton for 12 generations. He took an unpaid leave of absence from the college this past March in order to run for Congress.

Bishop counted on his slim margin holding before the final tally came in. He soon took off for Washington to undergo orientation for freshman congressmen. It was in Washington that he received word Grucci had conceded. Now Tim Bishop of Southampton has the task of proving he is as good as many voters thought him to be in this very surprising election. •

Mark Grivas Kendo Kyoshi

By Lise Visser

Mark Grivas of Hampton Bays is one of only two Americans to have been honored with an invitation to demonstrate their skills in Kendo at the 50th Anniversary All Japan Kendo Federation (AJKF) Championship that was held in Tokyo earlier this month. He and the other American, Jeffrey Marsten, of Bellevue, Washington, were the guests of the Federation at the Tokyo Grand Hotel.

With a ten-level ranking system (1-10 Dan) both Mr. Grivas and Mr. Marsten rank 7th Dan, after decades of study and practice. Kendo is further tested over and above the numerical rankings in a system of Renshi, Kyoshi and Hanshi, with Hanshi as the highest and most rarely achieved rank. There is currently a moratorium on granting 9th Dan status, and there are only ten Kendoists at that level in the world.

Mr. Grivas is Kyoshi and Mr. Marsten is Renshi. Mr. Grivas' rank as Kyoshi 7th Dan, makes him possibly the highest-ranking non-Asian in the world.

Ken means "the sword" and Do means "how you live your life, a discipline, a path." Mr. Grivas' philosophy is not the "way of the sword, but life as a swordsman."

A heavyweight Kendo robe worn by Mr. Grivas displays the words: Team USA, 10 WKC, M. Grivas. This is from his participation at the March, 1997 10th World Kendo Championship. Mr. Grivas achieved first place in his matches at the All Eastern Kendo Championship Open Tournament held in 2001. With a competition record second to none in the US, he has won all of the major tournaments more than once, with over 80 championships to his credit. Furthermore, he is the only non-Japanese to ever win the U.S. Champion title, and the only person to have done this twice.

Mark Grivas knew very early growing up in Astoria, Queens, that he would study Kendo. A classmate of his older brother took him to a Judo class taught by Bill Taylor "an Irish policeman and ex-Marine who was tough and disciplined. He taught the class for the PAL in a nearby church. My mother always liked Oriental things so she signed me up. I studied Judo for a year. Then, when I was eight, I went to a Judo tournament at a Bhuddist temple in New York with a tea ceremony and Kendo, which struck a chord deep inside me.

"You could be in Anytown, USA, and give sticks to two five year olds and they would use them as swords. Our ancestors lived and died by the sword. It's as though the gene survived. There's a natural attraction toward the sword, it's our history."

But at that time, equipment and dues were too expensive. He saved until he was twelve and he bought his first set of Kendo armor: men (headpiece), do (body armor), kote (gloves), and tare (loin cover). Growing up in mixed ethnic neighborhoods in Astoria and Jackson Heights, he studied Kendo in New York and "paid his dues" in competition going on to world games in Sapporo, Sao Paolo, Paris, Seoul, Paris and Kyoto. Today he has a dojo in Sag Harbor.

> Mr. Grivas' rank is... Kyoshi 7$^{th}$ Dan, making him possibly the highest-ranking non-Asian in the world...

Known to his students as Grivas Sensei (teacher), Mr. Grivas is well known worldwide for his Kendo accomplishments, leading to his inclusion with the eight non-Japanese Kendoists at this year's AJKF meet. Grivas Sensei was matched there with a French Ambassador, Jean-Jacque Lavigne, Conseiller Nucleaire to Japan, who has lived in Japan for 16 years and "was very good," according to Grivas Sensei. The demonstration match, or tachiai, was conducted by a Hanshi 9th Dan, and it was over in four minutes. The match was not rated but it was generally considered to be the most skillful of the demonstration matches of the four that were held there.

The American was then reunited with people he had met during his residencies in Japan. With frequent stays of up to a year Grivas Sensei has many long time friends.

Grivas Sensei has close ties and a long established relationship with his own Kendo teacher, 8th Dan Arima Sensei, who is the Chief of Police in Osaka. Mr. Grivas met Arima Sensei at the 3rd World Kendo Championship in England in 1976, where he represented the US in the Goodwill matches. Grivas Sensei was up one morning before the tournament began in order to practice, and he came upon a French and Japanese Kendo match in the practice hall. The French Kendoist "went for the man from Japan, who instantly stopped him with a thrust to the throat with extreme accuracy and power. The French man fell at my feet, then my eyes traveled to the nameplate on the Japanese man, which read Arima." Grivas Sensei's impression of Arima Sensei's abilities led to the teacher student relationship that continues to this day.

Grivas Sensei and Arima Sensei's Osaka style of Kendo, called Kansai, is different from the Tokyo style, or Kanto. In the Kansai style of the art the distance between competitors is greater and multiple swings of the sword are used, whereas in the Kanto style the Kendoists stand closer and use well placed, one stroke attacks.

What does Kendo look like? Think of Star Wars, with Obi wan Kanobi and Darth Vader parrying and thrusting in deliberate, sweeping movements. Then add powerful shouts that accompany the moves in the martial arts. According to Grivas Sensei, those light saber scenes were based on Kendo.

Ironically there exists a tense "rivalry between Japanese and non-Japanese in the US in Kendo. It is racial prejudice. There is no American at my level, and no one behind me. Non-Japanese are frowned upon in the higher ranks... there are petty jealousies."

In order to promote Kendo here, Grivas Sensei has opened a well-received Dojo (school for instruction) in Sag Harbor where enthusiastic Kendoists can learn from his lifetime of experience in this martial art. "Kendo is totally new to this area so I'm sure that start-up will be a challenge," Grivas Sensei said at the outset. However, a recent class at the Water Street dojo was attended by students, both children and adults, who were becoming adept in their new skills.

After removing their shoes, the students assemble and make gestures of respect. Grivas Sensei leads them in stretching to warm up and then the planned exercises progress from basic movements to much more rigorous and complicated activity. The class develops balance, improves coordination and provides a great aerobic workout. "Ich-nee-san-shee" (1-2-3-4) they count together in Japanese as the supervised movements are performed. "Start slowly, build speed, keep your back straight. Never lock your joints. The right form is important. Look straight ahead."

"When I was a child I would see the visiting Japanese Kendoists in the New York Dojo. I thought, 'If he can do it, I can do it.' Now in my Dojo I think, 'If I can do it, you can do it.'"

The students advance with the left leg behind the right foot in rapid Kendo steps. It was noted that one of the younger students in his class was, in fact, dressed in a Star Wars shirt.

Part of Kendo's appeal is that neither size and strength nor age are emphasized. Discipline and practice lead to advancement in the art, which is a life long process.

Grivas Sensei is assisted in the Dojo by his adorable wife, Misao, who is also proficient in Kendo. Misao is a 5th Dan and she has successfully competed in Kendo meets with her husband. Misao Grivas won the Women's Division at the Eastern Kendo Championship in 2001. She worked on certain techniques with a group of students in the Dojo while Grivas Sensei worked on other aspects with groups and individuals. Misao began her Kendo studies in high school in Japan, a very popular class there. She was presented with her Kendo sword as a gift from the underclassmen at her graduation.

Shinai is the type of bamboo sword used in the Dojo's class. Bokuto is the sword carved from wood, like Grivas Sensei's 100-year-old sword that was carved from a 100-year-old tree. The steel sword is called the katana. Grivas Sensei has a collection of six.

When the class has completed its exercises for the evening, Grivas Sensei and Misao don traditional hand made protective Kendo gear and stage a demonstration. It was somewhat disconcerting to observe this husband and wife team go at each other with swords, but their power, agility and grace suspended all fear.

Kendo evolved as "medieval Japan was a bloody battleground of turf wars," according to Grivas Sensei. "Swords were the weapon above all weapons. Kendo is the oldest, most elite of all the martial arts. All the others were devised in protection of the sword."

In addition to teaching Kendo, Grivas Sensei attends seminars to become an official at the next World Championships to be held in 2003, when the 45 nations in the International Kendo Federation will meet in Glasgow, Scotland. Mark Grivas is on the staff of Dan's Papers. To study Kendo: 723-0028. •

#225 The Usual Suspects...

Okay, we're one week out from Thanksgiving. We're all looking forward to it. Everyone has thought, at least once, of that wonderful Norman Rockwell painting where the grandmother is just about to place the golden brown turkey on the table. We all want to be in that painting, just once. Just once to have a Norman Rockwell Thanksgiving. Everybody nice to each other, everyone says kind and meaningful things. No one shouts. Nothing burns. The children are quiet and well behaved. Soft music plays in the background. And it would all come true if it weren't for our families.

I have determined that families are not nearly as different as people think. For instance, all families have multiple people in them. Theses people are genetically and/or maritally linked, although some in the family might deny it.

The Know It All: Each family has at least one person who knows how to do absolutely everything the correct way. From boiling an egg to commanding a mission to Mars, they are the only one who knows how to do it right. Sometimes you have two of these people in the family, in which case, one can't be invited to Thanksgiving dinner because they're like Japanese Fighting Fish and will kill each other given the chance. So you can either invite just one, or if you invite two, keep them in separate glasses.

The Remote Man: This is just always a man. He comes to Thanksgiving dinner, makes a round of hellos, gets a beer, sits in the best TV chair and takes over the remote. He turns on the pre-game football programs. He only talks about football. This is all he does. He hates to come to the dinner table because he'll miss the game. It's not that he doesn't love his family, it's just that family love and football love are two different entities and they cannot exist in one mind at the same time. As soon as he possibly can, without offending anyone except his wife, he leaves the table and takes his plate and returns to his TV chair.

The Screw Up: Every family is issued at least one Screw-Up. The Screw-Up dreads coming to Thanksgiving dinner because it starts with everyone politely asking him or her how he or she is doing and ends with everyone giving their advice to Screw-Up. Screw-Ups probably have to listen to hours of advice, most of which they have memorized already. But Screw-Ups are far more important than people realize. The Screw-Ups provide vital entertainment at the dinner. Inevitably, as is their destiny, they will screw something up at the dinner. Maybe they'll dump a whole bowl of mashed potatoes onto the floor that someone else can slip and fall in, maybe they'll try to pull out the chair for a senior female and screw it up so that the old lady falls right on her ass. Screw-Ups are like a box of chocolates, you never know what your gonna get. Plus, the problems they create provide vital fodder for family stories for generations to come.

The Perfectionist: This person is usually in the kitchen and holding up the dinner because they have to get every minuscule lump out of the gravy. They have a method of doing the task at hand and even if you threaten to brain them with a can of cranberry sauce, they do not move faster. They have to arrange everything on the serving platters just right. They ignore the screams and begging of the starving people huddled around the table waiting for food. They insist that no one eat until everything is on the table, including the bird, and someone says the blessing.

The Perfect Mom: Often coupled with The Remote Man. Usually there's more than one of these at any Thanksgiving dinner. She is wrangling children and doing her best to extract human behavior from excited hellions. She wants the Norman Rockwell painting to happen just once. She wants to see her children sitting nicely and displaying good manners, just for one dinner. She is constantly undermined by:

The Uncle Joe: Uncle Joe is the foot-loose and fancy-free older bachelor uncle. He's been there and done that. He yells at the Perfect Mom to leave the kids alone and let them be kids. It doesn't occur to him that these monsters will flush a gerbil down the toilet. He yells at the Perfectionist to get a move on; people are dying at the table. He tells the Know It All to perform an act on himself that is anatomically impossible. He tells the Screw-Up to ignore what everyone else is telling him, just live life as best you can. Uncle Joe's are fun for kids because they don't respect any of the other grown-ups. You can always count on an Uncle Joe to slip you a candy bar — even minutes before dinner!

The Auntie Em: She is the long-suffering sweetheart of the family. She disperses gentle sage advice. She's a little forgetful maybe, but we all love our Auntie Ems.

The Scarlet Harlot: Every family has at least one. The woman who went wrong and all the men went right after her. She has too much cleavage showing, too much make-up, too much jewelry. She smokes at the table when asked not to, and no matter how much alcohol you've seen her put down, she swears she's only on her second drink. She always has a boyfriend who just beat her or left her at the bar or stole her money or called her ex-husband or made a scene at her job or fill in the blank.

The Young People: Teenagers, all of them. None of them want to be there. They hate their weird families. They hate this annual ritual of being forced to eat with their gene pool. They believe that their future families will be completely different.

The Regulars: The Regulars are the average hard working basically normal people with no blatantly offensive personality traits. Usually there's one, sometimes two of these in a family. They are very nice.

The Blessing: The Blessing isn't a person, but it's always at every Thanksgiving table. When the Blessing is said, it creates a 30-second vortex through which all the participants are pulled and for that brief moment, the love is shared and the family is glued back together for another year.

Looking for Firewood?
Look for ALB.

As winter approaches, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Cooperative Asian Longhorned Beetle Project will continue to perform tree surveys. During this period, USDA officials would like to remind everyone purchasing firewood or moving wood products in and around quarantine areas to be aware of the dangers of transporting the highly destructive Asian longhorned beetle (ALB).

White, wormlike ALB larvae live deep in the heartwood of trees, and transporting them to areas not currently infested would prove devastating.

If you have questions concerning the movement of firewood, or have spotted an adult ALB or ALB larvae, please call 1–877–STOPALB or 1–866–265–0301.
For more information, visit www.aphis.usda.gov/oa/alb/alb.html.

further purpose on either side of the war. And so the British sailed off.

There are some interesting side stories to all of this. As I am sure you know, the Americans fought the British in 1776 to obtain their independence. What you may not know is why we fought the British again in 1812. After the Revolution, the British, still masters of the seas, engaged in a despicable practice of "impressing" American sailors into the British Navy. They would come aboard an American merchant ship or schooner in international waters, take their prize in tow, and return with it to England where they would force the Americans to join the British Navy. Basically it was kidnapping.

America wanted this business stopped. The British said the high seas were the high seas and they could do what they wanted. So America declared war, again, which resulted in the British sending their Navy to blockade America, sending troops to invade Baltimore (Francis Scott Key wrote the "Star Spangled Banner" while watching the British fleet bombard Fort McHenry at the entrance to Baltimore Harbor), offloading soldiers to march on Washington — which they set on fire — and finally, probably exhausted, agreed, in 1814, not to impress American seamen into the British Navy anymore. And so it ended.

The ship that was involved in the skirmish at Southold was probably called the Turtle because moving through the water it looked like the back of a turtle. But there was another possibility. Fifteen years earlier, during the Revolutionary War, there had been an earlier ship called the Turtle, built to fight the British. This ship had become famous for one of its attacks. The target had been the flagship of the British fleet, the Eagle, at anchor in New York Harbor.

Furthermore, the first Turtle had also been a submarine, the work of an earlier New York inventor named David Bushnell. Bushnell, a college boy at Yale, had built a vessel seven and a half feet high and six feet in diameter which resembled, it was said, a very large walnut. It was constructed of barrel staves, wood sheathing and iron plates and had things sticking out. Alongside the hatch on the top (where the single crewman entered), there was a tube that extended out three feet but inside was attached to an air bellows. By pumping the bellows, the crewman, when near the surface, could pump fresh air into the vessel. An air hole with a cover could be opened slightly to let the stale air out.

Also sticking out the top was a waterproof fuse that went up to a buoyant wooden package containing dynamite. You could light the fuse, make a run for it, and wherever the package was, it would shortly explode. Hopefully you were far away.

But the most remarkable thing was that, sticking out the top of this first Turtle, was a long iron screw. If you sank down and got underneath another vessel, say a British warship, you could turn a hand crank and drill a small hole straight into the underside of that ship, into which, by pulling some ropes, you could imbed the screw and the waterproof fuse.

That is exactly what happened there in New York Harbor underneath the great British Man O' War, the Eagle. A sailor, inside the Turtle, using two bicycle pedals that could maneuver the vessel up and down and this way and that, got under the Eagle, drilled his hole, lit the fuse, and then made a run for it.

There was a muffled bang. That was it.

This is how the event is described in a pamphlet called INVENTOR OF THE WEEK, co-published by M.I.T. in Boston.

"At most, the Turtle's efforts may have spooked those on board the ship, who could tell that something was attacking the bottom of the ship but could not see what it was. In two subsequent battles at Fort Lee on the Hudson River, the Turtle again swam splendidly but failed to bite. Nevertheless, George Washington appointed Bushnell to a commission in the Corps of Engineers, hailing him as 'a man of great mechanical powers, fertile in invention and a master of execution.'"

Interestingly, in 1787, two years after the Revolutionary War but many years before the War of 1812, Bushnell suddenly vanished. He was thought dead until, in 1826, a report of him turned up in Georgia, where he had lived for many years after changing his name to David Bush and becoming a doctor and professor. He died soon thereafter.

Fulton died in 1815, just a year after the War of 1812 ended. He had gone out onto some ice in New York Harbor to work on one of his steamboats, had come down with a chest cold, and had passed away in just one day. The City of New York closed all business for the day, and the U. S. Congress wore mourning. Fulton was just 45. •

CHARLES ADDAMS: AMERICAN GOTHIC AT GUILD HALL

East Hampton's Guild Hall Museum and the Tee and Charles Addams Foundation have joined forces to present a new exhibition of Gothic master and New Yorker cartoonist, Charles Addams at Guild Hall through January 5. The exhibition, curated by H. Kevin Miserocchi, contains thirty-seven finished drawings as well as eight preliminary drawings to illustrate the process by which his ideas came to fruition. The art of Charles Addams is not only haunting, but captivating and humorous because it connects the extraordinary with the outrageous, the archetypal with the everyday. Don't miss this rare opportunity to experience a sophisticated American master.

With Susan Simm

Giving Thanks For The Unfairly Maligned Merlot

Just as "Chardonnay" became a euphemism for "white wine" in the late '80s – remember how much more sophisticated it felt to order a glass of "Chardonnay" at chic restaurants? – Merlot suffered a similar fate in the stark and über trendy 90s.

In its defense, "Merlot," as opposed to, say, "Cabernet Sauvignon" – a mouthful in more ways than one – does sound cool in the same way "Chardonnay" did while also appealing to that late-century minimalism. As Kelly Alexander, contributing writer for Food & Wine, notes, "Merlot, everyone's favorite red wine in the 90s, reached its trendoid apotheosis when it was name-checked not once but twice on Seinfeld." Fans of the show may remember the second incident when, in 1997, Kramer so memorably uttered, "I live for Merlot." Alexander, who, though admitting to putting Merlot on a "tired trend" list that same year (prior to Kramer's proclamation, I might add) goes on to relate a story told to her recently by a friend that she found distressing.

"Just the other day, my buddy was dining at Lupa (in Manhattan). He asked for a glass of Merlot. 'We don't have Merlot,' the waiter sniffed, rolling his eyes. How did a wine become a symbol of the passé?"

How, indeed? Is it our relentless desire for the next new thing? Or just infatuation with hip language? Are we tired of the word or the wine?

To my mind, the problem seems to be more a matter of semantics than a fault of the grape. Merlot, as Alexander points out, is, aside from being grown all over the world, the main grape grown in France's illustrious Bordeaux region. Often blended with other grapes, it is sometimes, and in the case of Chateau Petrus, famously, left alone.

Here on the North Fork, where tradition is still honored and vogues eschewed, however, the much-maligned Merlot, happily out of range of the next-cool-thing radar, is reaching a level of quality that would do a celebrated French estate proud. As the grape is well suited to cultivation here, almost all of the North Fork's wineries make a Merlot and Lenz Winery's '97 vintage ($55 at the winery) even scored higher in a blind tasting in Manhattan than Petrus' '95 and '97 vintages. It is, not surprisingly, excellent.

Another of my favorites is Bedell's 1998 Reserve Merlot ($38 at the winery). It is full of chewy, dark fruit flavors and will easily stand up to game such as duck and pheasant, as well as turkey.

But the Merlot news here is a relative newcomer: Raphael. The owners even considered growing the grape exclusively, perhaps not a bad idea in their case. Renowned winemaker Rich Olsen-Harbich is in the cellar and Raphael's 1999 Merlot ($20), a second label, is superb. We tasted it with some other heavy hitters boasting higher price tags and were very impressed. Bright fruit and a lush mouthfeel are hallmarks of this well-balanced wine made predominantly from Merlot and Cabernet Franc. Highly recommended.

So, while I may not share Kramer's exclusive passion for Merlot, I cannot ignore the growing accomplishments of our local winemakers. After all, if Chateau Petrus '90 can score a perfect 100 according to Wine Spectator and retail for over $1500 a bottle, anything seems possible. Cheers.

Rewriting History: Fly Like A Turkey?

What Could Have Happened If Ben Franklin Had Gotten His Way

By Susan Whitney Simm

Though the pilgrims in New England obviously didn't head to the local Walbaum's and plunk down cash for their feast, the turkey of their day was nothing like its domesticated descendant most of us are looking forward to next Thursday.

Wild turkeys, native to northern Mexico and the eastern United States, have longer necks and legs as well as smaller breasts than turkeys bred for the table. And unlike eagles, our national bird, turkeys live in flocks. Imagine seeing a flock of turkeys flying across the sky! It must have been quite a sight. In fact, statesman Ben Franklin even thought the North American wild turkey – a brightly plumed, cunning bird of flight – should be the national bird.

"The turkey is a much more respectable Bird [than the eagle] and withal a true original Native of North America," he wrote. Author G. T. Klein even went so far as to say that the American turkey was "wild and wary to the point of genius," not exactly the description we would apply to the flightless, plump gobblers at Miloski's turkey farm in Riverhead.

But what DID the pilgrims eat? And how did today's typical Thanksgiving menu evolve from those beginnings?

When the pilgrims and Wamapanoag Indians gathered in 1621 in Plymouth, Massachusetts (the first English colony established in the New World) they celebrated for three days straight. It was a traditional English harvest celebration to which the colonists invited Massasoit, the most important sachem among the Wamapanoag. Though this occasion marks the beginning of the popular holiday tradition we now celebrate, it was only in the nineteenth century that this event became identified with the American Thanksgiving holiday.

Thanksgiving would not be declared a national holiday until 1863, when President Lincoln announced officially that it would be celebrated annually on the last Thursday of November. (President Roosevelt would later make it the fourth Thursday of every November – which occasionally includes five Thursdays – so that it never gets too close to Christmas.)

But back to the food. Though there is no real evidence that turkey was served at the Pilgrim's first Thanksgiving, the tradition of turkey is rooted in the History of Plymouth Plantation, written by William Bradford some 22 years after the actual celebration. He wrote,

> "...besides waterfowl there was great store of wild turkeys, of which they took many, besides venison, etc. They had about a peck of meal a week to a person, or now since harvest, Indian corn to that proportion. Which made many afterwards write so largely of their plenty here to their friends in England, which were not feigned by true reports."

So we do know that certain foods were available to the pilgrims at the time of their celebration. Fish, such as cod, bass, bluefish and eel as well clams and lobsters were probably plentiful. Wild turkey, goose, and waterfowl were abundant and the early settlers were even known to eat a bald eagle on occasion. Venison was almost certainly consumed, along with beer made from barley, corn meal made from Indian corn, late season squash such as pumpkin and walnuts, chestnuts and dried fruits such as gooseberries, plums and blueberries. Maple syrup, honey, and fresh eggs along with small quantities of butter could have been used in cooking along with seasonings such as sorrel and yarrow, not commonly used today.

Though you might not recognize the recipes the pilgrims used as anything you'd prepare today, there are a few that are similar. This Thanksgiving marks the 200th anniversary of the first American cookbook, called American Cookery. (There are only six known remaining original copies of the book, written by an orphan named Amelia Simmons.) It contains at least a few Thanksgiving recipes still used. One is called "Pompkin Pudding," but really it's pumpkin pie. You start with one quart of stewed and strained pumpkin, three pints cream, nine beaten eggs, sugar, mace, nutmeg and ginger.

Later on, in 1884, a Thanksgiving menu from the Canton, Mass., Historical Society reflects what has become traditional today. Roast turkey with cranberry and apple sauces had already become the menu's centerpiece. Sweet potatoes, roasted, and white potatoes, mashed, accompanied macaroni and cheese, and celery, pickles, and "cold" slaw served as relishes. Dessert consisted of mince and pumpkin pies, and sweet cider, along with black coffee, were served as beverages. All of which are likely to make an appearance on our holiday tables today. Also not uncommon, especially for large gatherings, are prime rib of beef and baked ham (neither of which the pilgrims would have had).

Today, the vast majority of menus, both home and restaurant, are centered around the bird that nearly became our national symbol. Side dishes, on the other hand, aside from the ubiquitous creamed spinach and candied sweet potatoes, are getting more creative, reflecting another trend toward vegetarianism. Some families are even sparing the bird entirely and opting instead for a vegetarian feast.

But those who do choose the traditional turkey are not only stuffing them with dressing, but dressing them up to look their best on tables gleaming with silver, crystal, and linen, a far cry from what the original celebrants must have faced. The spirit of sharing and tolerance, however, remains the same. And for that we should aways give thanks.

Thanksgiving Dining Out Suggestions

If your idea of making dinner, ANY dinner, is, as George Burns so memorably quipped, "making reservations," then you are in luck here on the North Fork this holiday season. The following restaurants are open for Thanksgiving and will, after you have enjoyed a superlative meal, be happy to clear the dishes faster than you can say "pumpkin pie."

Cooperage Inn, Baiting Hollow

This charming restaurant is celebrating not only Thanksgiving, but also the much-anticipated opening of its expanded and renovated dining rooms. Owner Jonathan Perkins has spent the last six months refurbishing his building, which now includes a "harvest room" with French doors, fireplace, and mahogany raised-panel walls and a new "private buffet room" that seats 35. Of course, the beautiful and popular bar area – along with Kevin! – are still there, and the menu, well, it just seems to get better and better.

Glorious Thanksgiving buffet includes autumn harvest chowder, stuffed roast turkey, prime rib, smoked spiral ham, penne ala vodka, baked clams, crab cakes, stuffed loin of pork, mint stuffed flounder, seafood medley sauté, and a wide variety of vegetable side dishes, making this the perfect spot if you have vegetarian diners in the family. The price: $29.95 for adults, $15.95 for children. Cooperage offers a nice selection of local wines by the glass in addition to a full bar. Located on Sound Avenue in Baiting Hollow (just west of Fox Hollow Golf Club). Call 727-8994 for more info.

Fauna, Aquebogue

Owner/chef Mark Mittleman has been wowing patrons since opening Fauna in May of 2001 with both beautiful presentations and flavor-packed food. He will be serving his second Thanksgiving at the restaurant by popular demand – last year "was a great success," he said – and that is music to the ears of his many devotees. A five course menu will feature a choice of roasted acorn squash soup or shrimp bisque; salad choices of proscuitto, arugula and goat cheese in Port dressing, sliced pears and walnuts with gorgonzola, mesclun or Caesar. Appetizers include shrimp rolls with sweet chili sauce, spinach latkes, or seafood stuffed mini peppers. Entrees include roast turkey with shallot pan gravy, red potato encrusted red snapper, prime rib, and chicken and fettuccine with a mascarpone cream sauce. Among the many sides (choose 2) offered are sausage and fennel stuffing, Parmesan mashed potatoes, and maple-tangerine glazed carrots. Dessert choices (save room!) include a caramel walnut torte with chocolate glaze. Reservations are being accepted for three seatings at 1, 3 and 5 p.m. Price: $35 per person, children under 13 half price. Fauna has a good wine list and full bar. Located on the Main Road in Aquebogue. Call 722-5813.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

NOISE

Today, virtually every new car isolates you very well from road and engine noise. Automobile noise suppression is a science unto itself, and it entails much more than placing acoustical material where the sun don't shine: inside a car's bodywork.

When it comes to luxury cars, silence is golden. The more expensive the car, the quieter it is supposed to be. Remember the old Rolls Royce advertising slogan, "At sixty miles per hour, all you can hear is the sound of the clock."

There is also pressure on today's manufacturers to make silent cars because most of the in-dash radios produce better sound than the average person hears in his home system.

Years ago, silence was not that big an issue with cars. The cars of the '40s,'50s and '60s had very little sound deadening material. Sports cars had none, but then again part of being a sport was not minding the "song" of the engine and gearbox. If you were not happy with the stock sounds, you could always add dual exhausts with special mufflers to customize the noise to your taste.

Several years ago I was with John Weitz outside his garage. We were admiring one of his fleet, a faithfully built replica of a 1939 Jaguar SS 100 sports car. It had a late model Jaguar six-cylinder engine, equipped with three SU carburetors with no air cleaners on them. It also had dual exhaust with sport mufflers. The Jag was running at high idle of, I would guess, about 1200 RPM. It made delicious noise, because you could hear the hissing of the carburetors in your right ear while you heard the snarly exhaust with your left. I looked at John and said one word: "Stereo."

Those are good noises, and good noise is what correct sports cars are all about. For pure noise one can't beat driving a convertible. Porsche convertibles, of all vintages, are perhaps the most enjoyable because their engines are placed right behind your head, and a lot of good sounds whiff through the cooling vents on the rear deck.

I vividly remember the whooshing sounds my '55 Porsche Speedster and Spyder would make as I rowed through the gears. Truth be told, the cars, by today's standards, weren't that fast, but they sounded fast, with all that fan noise creating locomotion and commotion right behind one's head.

The new 911s, and especially the Boxters, have a totally different sound. They rev much higher and wail like a cat in the night. Oh yes, these new cars are much faster.

Two of the noisiest cars I've even driven were a Volkswagen Thing and an American General Hummer. I owned a "Thing" – you know, that weird Volks that looked like a German Kubelwagen Jeep. To make a long story short, I tried in every way to quiet the car, even ordered special acoustical panels from a company in England. Nothing worked. The car was painful to drive at sixty miles per hour on the highway.

The same can be said of the original Hummer. Don't get me wrong, I love the looks of this machine – it's the kind of beast you don't want to meet in a dark alley. It has more road presence than any car in the world. But, and it's a big but, because it is derived from a military vehicle, it's noisy as hell at highway speeds. To me, it's obvious that Uncle Sam doesn't give a darn about hearing loss in young GIs. The bizarre thing is that all civilian Hummers come standard with killer radios, but on the highway the calliope of gearbox, engine and road noise make hearing the radio impossible. (P.S. The new Hummer is a much more civilized vehicle.)

There are two different philosophies of noise pertaining to sports cars and luxury sedans. Sedans should be as quiet as possible. For example, take the overkill of double-pane glass in the doors of the S-Klass Mercedes. Sports cars on the other hand should make sporty sounds. The new Dodge Viper has a totally redesigned exhaust system to give it a more masculine sound. Porsches have short exhaust pipes, a requirement of the rear engine design. Many late night hours in Stuttgart have been spent working out the right exhaust rap for this famous race-derived engine.

Then there's Ferrari. I don't know how the Italians do it, but every vehicle they produce makes the right sounds. When the light changes to green in Rome, one hears a symphony of exhaust that is music to a car enthusiast's ears. Fiats, Lancias and Vespas back up the occasional premier tenor of all the automotive world, Ferrari.

What's noise to some ears is music to others.

Off To New York...

By David Lion Rattiner

This past weekend I went down to Virginia to visit one of my closest friends from grade school, John Schirrippa, who is a junior and mathematics major at Mary Washington College in Virginia.

I had been planning the trip for several weeks and came to the conclusion that I should drive down to Virginia from New York instead of flying or taking the train. I knew that I was going to get cranky on the drive down, especially because I planned on driving alone, but at the same time I couldn't wait to make the trip. I felt like I was going on a mission of great importance. After all, getting a chance to visit a best friend far away does not happen too often.

Now, because I have been living in Manhattan for the past two and a half months my truck has been happily resting in the Dan's Papers parking lot in Bridgehampton. The plan consisted of four phases. Phase one was to leave work a day early, take the bus to Bridgehampton and get my truck. Phase two was to drive to my Dad's house in East Hampton. Phase three was to pack up some clothes. Finally, phase four was to drive to Virginia and see John. Obviously this was not the most intelligent plan. Just getting back and forth from Manhattan to East Hampton was going to take four hours. Not to mention the five-hour drive it was going to take to get to Virginia from New York City. For some reason I just wanted to do it. Kind of the way Forrest Gump felt when he just wanted to go for a run.

After work in Manhattan, I got on the Hampton Jitney and then headed to Bridgehampton to get my car. The bus ride kind of bothered me, as it represented the start of such a long journey, but I sucked it up and drove to my Dad's house and started packing. The clock said nine o'clock p.m. I looked at my truck outside, and then looked at my bed inside. My head went kerplunk as it hit the pillow. I figured that completing phases one through three of the plan wasn't bad.

I woke up the next day and drove to Virginia. John greeted me jumping up and down in the middle of the street. I nearly ran him over. We gave each other a couple of high fives and headed to his apartment to catch up.

College down south is a lot different than college up north. For one thing, you can live in a four-bedroom apartment with three roommates for less than three hundred dollars a month. The other thing that really stood out was how many people in Virginia enjoy hunting. It was so funny to walk around campus and see people wearing camouflage and bragging about the size of the turkey that they had recently killed. What is it that makes hunting so great? I don't get it.

John and I went outside and caught up with some of his friends that are in his a cappella singing group. We then went out to have some burritos. After eating, John and I went out and walked around campus. Much of the conversation was about how amazingly huge the burritos were and what we were going to do when we graduated.

"I'm thinking about going to law school." John said

"Sounds like a blast," I said

"I don't know man, I don't think that I would like working in an office all day," John said.

"Trust me man, you won't. The only time working in an office is fun is if you are a PC video game critic. Otherwise, computers are the devil."

"Then what are we going do for a living?" John asked.

"Well I have been thinking about this. I don't think there is answer. I think that our destiny is to not have any idea what our careers are going to be. What do you think?"

"It might be fun to go to the police academy."

"True," I said

John then got a call about a nearby party. We went to the party where we chatted some more about our futures, which then turned into jokes, which then turned into a great time.

The following day John and I got up and put on sweatpants and sweatshirts and went out for a run. As we were running down the streets of Fredericksburg Virginia in the cold rain, I looked over to him and said, "Being a college student isn't so bad. Who cares where we'll be in ten years? We'll get there one day and we'll get there together."

I then realized that I was running on the streets with John in Virginia with no idea how far we were going. Kind of like the way I feel when I have no idea what I'm going to do and how I'm going to get there.

If there is one thing that colleges in the South have in common with colleges in the North, it is the fact that friends can go out together and go off on a run.

Holiday Shop 'Til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

The holiday season is upon us and this is the busiest time of the year. Let's do some holiday bargain shopping!

The Secret Closet on Jobs Lane in Southampton is not keeping it a secret about their "Closing For The Season" blowout sale, now through Thanksgiving weekend. Absolutely everything in the shop is on sale at 50% to 75% off regular prices. There is a wonderful selection of leather, corduroy skirts and pants, sweaters, dresses, accessories and much more. You can fill up your shopping bag with holiday goodies with this bargain sale. What great buys and what a wonderful secret to share with my readers.

This holiday give gifts that have a history and are handcrafted by local Shinnecock craftspeople. Wampum earrings designed by Herman Quinn are made of white and purple clam shells (my favorite colors by the way). Contemporary silver jewelry inspired by the past embedded with turquoise and other semi-precious stones are great values. A small soft doll crafted with cedar and dressed in traditional Eastern Woodlands regalia by Marion Phillips can be hung as an ornament or a stocking stuffer. Great gifts like these are available at the Shinnecock National Cultural Center and Museum Gift Shop located on the Shinnecock Indian Reservation on Montauk Highway and West Gate Road in Southampton. Open Friday through Sunday, 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., visitors will also enjoy craft demonstrations and refreshments.

Shop Southampton and win a $10 gift certificate! Just get a "red" Southampton Country Holiday button distributed by the Chamber of Commerce office on Main Street in Southampton Village, or any participating merchants. When a "Mystery Spotter" spots that button you're wearing, you get the $10 gift certificate. This promo runs daily, day or evening shopping, from Friday, November 29 through Tuesday, December 24. Hey, every ten dollars counts.

Thanks to the Hampton Coffee Company on Montauk Highway in Watermill, you can send "A Gift of the Hamptons" to everyone on your holiday gift list, wherever they may be! Each gift basket includes a selection of their famous daily-roasted estate grown coffee plus great accompaniments like extra large coffee mugs, great music CD's, Aldo's Biscotti, fine teas from The Republic of Tea, Zagat Guides and much more. In face, since each gift basket is made to order, they can be designed to your exact specifications at no extra charge. Gift baskets are available in small, medium and large or just create your own and prices starts at $25.99. There are special discounts and the baskets can be shipped anywhere and thy will help you with your last minute gift...Call them at 631-726-COFE or just stop by and check it out.

This one is for you...If you join Gemayel Salon & Spa on Tuesday, November 26, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., they have an offer you just can't refuse. During this time they will be offering complimentary mini facials by Guinot Paris. A Guinot skin care expert will cleanse, analyze and massage away your stress in this thirty minutes of pampering. Gemayel is located at the Bridgehampton Commons, on Montauk Highway. Call them to schedule an appointment at 631-725-8500.

There is everything for Christmas at Treasure Island on Montauk Highway in Wainscott. From now until November 28 there are special Christmas trees on sale and the savings are grande! Look for good deals on wreaths, lights, trim, décor and more. Treasure Island is filled to the rafters with the smells and flavors of Christmas, not to mention the music...There is dazzling gift wrap, ribbon, Christmas flowers, vases and baskets, creative gifts and lots of cool stocking stuffers for kids and adults alike. Save 20% on all Christmas lights, wire sculptures, extension cords and gutter caps. You will enjoy just walking around this winter wonderland if nothing else.

I already bought my mom a beautiful down comforter at the Elegant John at the Red Horse Market in East Hampton. Wait 'til she sees this! It's comfy and warm and just what the doctor ordered...Elegant John is having their huge pre-holiday sale with great prices that just can't be beat... They guarantee their prices on down comforters are the lowest in the country, including catalogues, chains and discount stores. You will also find them on the web: www.downfactorystore.com and you will see for yourself. I shop here for the extra, extra deep fitted sheets for my new extra, extra fat mattress...

Shhhh...Shoe Inn is doing it again with a fabulous "Fall Clearance Sale" on just shoes and boots at a whopping 50% off. What more can I say, this tells it all...Stop in and you will walk out with a shopping bag full, trust me on this one. Located in East Hampton, and Westhampton Beach, also, Palm Beach and Westwood.

Q. My wife and I are celebrating our tenth anniversary this Christmas and she has but one wish. She wants a tiny non-shedding puppy such as a Maltese and I would like to surprise her with something-extra special and make her wish come true.

A. I think I have the solution for you to make her wish come true...Jenna Robbins of Harley's Angels in Westhampton Beach. She specializes in only pint sized pups of the highest quality breed and some are breeds you may not have seen before. She has a new breed called the Murphdog, which looks like a black Maltese. Jenna is also a trainer and is very knowledgeable about their care. She can be reached at 631-653-3955 or by e-mail at: Harleys5@optonline.net

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Holiday Shopping!

Fashion And Function For Lil' Babes

Babies have it easy. Whatever mommies dress them in – hats, gloves, bibs, footsy pajamas – it is almost certainly a hit. We never look at a baby and say, "Nah, that color doesn't really work." Or, "ooh, that top is not at all flattering." Even when fashioned in the coldest weather-wear, when we can barely make out if there is a human underneath all those layers, babies are still adorable. Come winter-time, when the rest of the population looks like a rendition of the bloated Michelin man, babies continue to call in their coohs and caahs.

As can often be ignored in adult wear, though, it's the function, not the fashion, that is top priority for babies in cold weather. Their outfits truly must serve their purpose – or it can be dangerous. Clothing shield's babies' sensitive skin from the harsh elements of winter.

The trick to keeping babies warm and dry in harsher conditions is layering. Several lightweight coverings are more effective and less restricting than a couple of heavy ones. Baby Jockey, part of the Jockey underwear enterprise, makes a wide-necked bodysuit that can serve as an excellent bottom layer. ($16 for a 3-pack, available at major department stores such as Macy's and Nordstrom, and www.jockey.com). Or, for full-body coverage, Jockey's union suit layers your baby from head-to-toe, with feet that can roll up as cuffs or be worn footed ($16).

If you want to wrap your little nugget in fleece, Patagonia makes a snuggly pair of overalls that can serve as an added layer. ($48, www.patagonia.com) The outfit has adjustable shoulder straps that expand with your baby's growth spurts, and the roomy fit allows for compatibility with other layers.

Once you've donned your little one in these bottom layers, select an effective outer layer to cap off comfort and warmth. Baby Gap has an excellent selection of coats for babies, at affordable prices (www.gap.com).

Erica Marshad, owner of the Nanny Agency of the Hamptons, believes that as long as babies are dressed warmly enough, it is energizing and healthy to continue walking with them outside in the wintertime (avoid temperatures below freezing). The absolute essential for ensuring safety? A hat. Head covering is a must because roughly 25 percent of lost body heat is radiated from the head. Try Jockey's 100% cotton headgear, which fits a baby that is up to 12 pounds, and includes a foldover band for a snug fit.

If the outside temperature is nearing the freezing level, time spent outdoors should be limited. Babies are more sensitive to the cold, and are unable to shiver or move about as easily as adults can to keep themselves warm. For extra safety, choose playful and functional accessories to complete your baby's wardrobe. A whimsical, two-toned scarf from Zutano, $14, protects her neck. (Available at babystyle.com in tangerine/cream and pink/cream. With matching hat, $20.) Patagonia makes a delicious pair of fleece booties, which ensure a snug fit through their elasticized back and single-snap closure, $20, patagonia.com. The booties come in playful colors for your little weekend warrior – such as "arctic blue" and "hot lava."

Once fully dressed and braving the cold, don't forget to check your baby's warmth periodically. Avoid feeling her feet and hands, which are almost always cold. Instead, touch her neck, or her arms or thighs.

Christmas By The Bay

Attention shoppers there are only 33 shopping days left until Christmas, so I suggest to you to begin them by heading out to Sag Harbor to a brand new store, Christmas By The Bay. I can't imagine a more beautiful setting for a Christmas store than situated directly off Main Street (on Long Island Avenue), across from the windmill at the Harbor's entrance and next door to the Cigar Bar.

This store specializes in ornaments for the tree as well as decorations for the entire home or office at very reasonable prices (starting at $2.99). They will also provide custom holiday decorators for those who need help with their Christmas trees or parties. Owners, John Ovanessian and Kristine Lardner (the owner of At Home in Provence) have both added a unique quality to this adorable store. They have decorated seven Christmas trees all special and one more beautiful than the next. There is a sports tree with baseball, football, hockey, ice skaters and gymnasts. There is another decorated in the 1950's retro-style adorned with Marilyn Monroe figures from the film The Seven Year Itch, a Lucy and Ricky Riccardo ornament, an Elvis Presley figure and lit with bubble lights. The next tree was exquisitely done in all gold ribbon and lights with a Victorian flair. Another was done in the traditional red and green plaid ribbon with all types of Santa Clause and antique dolls. One of the most creative trees is the Mardi Gras tree covered in shiny purple ribbon sequined masks, the drama/comedy theatrical masks, clowns and musical instruments. Then as you walk back toward the entrance, the spirit of Christmas really begins to envelope you because this tree is covered in silver glistening snowflakes, and glass ornaments twinkling as they spin. I found this particularly gorgeous. And then the crowd-pleaser, the tree decorated completely from the sea. It has red lobster lights, hand-painted wooden tropical fish by "Sea Creatures," mermaids, boats and fishing lures.

John and Kristine have every cabinet, shelf and counter space (which are also for sale) filled with all types of Christmas paraphernalia. From the ceiling Santa mobiles and sleighs oscillate, hand-stitched quilts and runners hang on the walls of the store. Candleholders, cocktail napkins, tablecloths and reindeer are everywhere. I will go back to purchase the lightweight acrylic ice sculptured reindeer (unless they were already purchased). My friend bought a hysterical battery operated Santa Clause who is exercising on the beach to techno music with an annoying aerobics instructor's voice inspiring him.

Christmas by the Bay has something for everyone. I am now happily "Dreaming of a White Christmas." Christmas by the Bay has officially opened for the holidays and is located at 10 Long Island Avenue. In Sag Harbor call (631) 725-2574 for store hours.

HOIDAY GUIDE

Great Gifts For Grandpas

It's tough to shop for fathers and grandfathers. Unless they're sports enthusiasts, avid readers, or big into ties, they're a hard bunch to find gifts for. Here are some ideas for the holidays.

The sturdy and comfortable, lined canvas shirt from L.L. Bean is a good, old-fashioned option. It's warm enough to be worn as a jacket but not too bulky to be worn as a shirt. While soft on the inside, it looks manly and tough, like he might head out for a day in the woods. Even if he just takes a walk down Main Street, he'll be protected and warm, and at $59, the shirt is a pretty good bargain. The catalog also has loads of wool sweaters, hats, scarves and other grandfather staples. The Shetland Wool Sweater comes as a pullover or as a cardigan.

Electric razors make good presents, especially if you opt for the "world's only personalized razor," the Spectra Norelco. It has nine comfort settings and is touted by Norelco to be the best of the best. At $249.99, you can be sure it's good, but if that's a bit much for a razor, there are also less expensive models like the MicroAction Plus, for $64.99. Other good gadgets can be found at the Sharper Image. For example, the CD/MP3 Shower Companion with a radio and alarm clock could keep your grandfather showering happily. It's said to have "brilliantly clear" speakers, and while it's a little large, it hangs from the showerhead or can be taken anywhere. The player costs $199.95, which may be a little steep for a shower radio, but it's good-quality fun.

HOIDAY GUIDE

Great Gifts For Grandmas

Holidays bring lots of good things: family, good times, great food, and best of all, presents. The ones you get are almost as good as the ones you give. If you're running down your list and need a few ideas for the people in your life who never seem to ask for anything, like Grandma, here are some suggestions.

You can't go wrong with a pair of slippers. Land's End's Moosehead Moccasins ($39.50) are made of soft leather and can be ordered lined with polyfleece or unlined. They come in a variety of cute colors Grandma will love.

The Polartech throw, also from Land's End, is another good around-the-house gift. It's so soft and cozy that it practically induces sleep. Also available in a variety of colors, it's a great blanket to throw over the back of the couch or to keep at the end of your bed for naptime.

If your Grandmother likes to read, The Best American Short Stories of the Century is a great collection of short stories by writers from the past hundred years. It includes works by Hemingway, Faulkner, Willa Cather, Tennessee Williams, Eudora Welty as well as more recent writers like Pam Houston and Lorrie Moore. Edited by John Updike, the anthology is ambitious in its goal to encompass (or at least highlight) a century of the best writing in one book. It comes in the unabridged hardcover version, an abridged paperback, and on CD (also available abridged or unabridged). Grandma can curl up under her new blanket and settle in for a good read on those snowy afternoons.

If you really want to splurge, The Sharper Image makes a chair that's a few steps up from the old Lazy Boy. It's called the "Human Touch" massage chair, so named because it is said to feel like hundreds of fingers are massaging your body. For $1,499.99, you can treat Grandma to back and leg massages in this recliner every day. The Sharper Image boasts that it's the only massage chair preferred by the American College of Chiropractic Orthopedists. Regardless of who's endorsing it, the chair looks luxurious and is sure to make your Grandma happy and relaxed all winter long.

Finally, my personal favorite, is the Electronic Locator, also from The Sharper Image. There are four colored discs that can be attached to anything (keys, remote control, Joey Jr.), so that when you lose that item, you just click on the beeper, prompting the disc to beep until you find it. It's great not just for your Grandmother but also for your absentminded siblings and friends. You'll never again have to hear "Where are my keys?" as they frantically search the house before running out the door. –Rachel May

Books are great for grandparents, who (generally) have more time on their hands to read. The new John Updike novel, Seek My Face, is the story of how New York became the art center of the world. Though billed as a fictional book, the characters are based on real-life artists like Jackson Pollock. It's part history, part fiction, told in Updike's faultless form.

If you want to get your grandparents in on the email circuit this year and you have the funds, a computer can help them keep in touch with you all year long. Dell and Apple make good, affordable laptops that are easy to set up and tote around. Desktops may be a better alternative for people who like a bigger keyboard and screen. If your grandparents aren't used to emailing, it might take some time to get used to, but once they get the hang of it, they'll love it. They can get pictures, exchange instant messages, use the Internet, and generally stay in touch with the world if they're stuck inside during the cold winter months. –Rachel May

HAMPTONS NIGHTLIFE WITH CHRISTINE CARROLL

STAR ROOM

Are you ready for a white Christmas? The Star Room is. The decorations have been hung with care including 14 Christmas trees and garlands. One of the trees is 15 feet high. Who wouldn't want to have dinner when here there is a present on every table? After dinner on Fridays at 9 p.m. you can see New York's finest comedians in the adjoining club. Every Saturday dance the night away staring at 10 p.m. under hundreds of silver ornaments and more trees. But, this Wednesday, Thanksgiving Eve, the Star Room hosts the biggest party of the year. Hundreds of tickets have been sold in advance so get moving. There will be four DJs playing house, dance, hip-hop, and reggae in both the restaurant and adjoining club. Tickets are $10 but for those of you having dinner at the Star Room you will receive priority and complimentary admission. The party starts at 10 p.m. and will rock on until 4 a.m. A few tables remain for bottle service so call 631-537-3332 for reservations quickly. Ticket will be available at the door.

SOUTHAMPTON COLLEGE PROUDLY PRESENTS
THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

Featuring films that either take place on Long Island or were filmed here.

Honoring Long Island and the Hamptons as "Hollywood East" by presenting films produced here.

2 P.M. Saturday, November 23 – *MASQUERADE
A taunting, romantic suspense thriller of a young man's ambiguous ambitions and the wealthy wife he married for her dowry? It is a dark, who-dunnit plot lit up by beautiful people and, likewise beautiful Southampton and Sag Harbor.

Saturday, November 30 – No Showing

2 P.M. Saturday, December 7 – *NETWORK
East Hampton's titanic denizens, Director Sidney Lumet and writer Paddy Chayefsky's dead-on "shot heard 'round the world" taken at television and unprincipled industry in general, presaged today's headlines. A way-over-the-top entertaining melodrama, it won Oscars' for Mr. Chayefsky, Peter Finch, Faye Dunaway and Beatrice Straight. This film gets you up off your seat shouting, "We aren't going to take it anymore!"

2 P.M. Saturday, December 14 – *SABRINA
A bright holiday bauble. The lots of color added remake of the Audrey Hepburn/Bogart original, adds more gilt to the other L.I. Gold Coast, Glen Cove, where Scroogy, business only, Harrison Ford is made to appreciate the cheer in the world by his chauffeur's young daughter. It's a lush, very-merry movie.

Hosted by Guy De Fraumeni,
Hollywood Film Critic and
Oscar and Film Festival Movie Judge.
Assisted by Sarah Halsey.

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

What's In A Name: The Crazy Monkey

Most galleries take the name of their owners. Such places are given instant and everlasting identifies, reflecting the owners' tastes or predispositions. Labels devour the art world, like society at large, and consumers grow to depend on them. We know what to expect when we walk into Paula Cooper's or Gagosian's venue.

Often, gallery names give art a historical context. Consider, for example, Betty Parsons and the connotation attributed to her gallery.

Frankly, we don't know what to do with "The Crazy Monkey," a new site in Amagansett. Should the art be taken seriously with a name like that? Is it fine art? (Actually, the gallery is named for the owner after all, recalling a childhood nickname.)

Other aspects do not conform to traditional gallery notions either, namely the setting. Once again, we realize that things have changed from the bare white walls and open spaces that previously characterized a gallery environment. (We're not talking about alternate spaces here, which is another story.)

For example, The Crazy Monkey enjoys organic, earthy hues (orange, browns/green) on the wall which compliment the work. Jewelry takes up some space as well, an acceptable art form to be sold along with paintings.

The art itself in the current show is upbeat, whimsical and colorful. While the artists' styles may sometimes be derivative, the techniques are accomplished and thoughtful. Consider Andrea McCafferty's figures, some making comments on contemporary culture (woman with sunglasses) and others bringing attention to Matissse and his special style.

Trish Franey's work is often more abstract, using mixed media to good advantage. Her "Frozen Heart" (with real seeds) and "Urban Freaks" (with authentic hair) are delightful.

Rosalind Brenner's work presents more representational and less "playful" aspects of life. Her view leans toward the sociological in "Women With Oranges" and "Jerusalem." Her lack of perspective in the former piece is what gives it interest. Two other works, "Mother and Child," extend the idea of flatness and recall indigenous art from Mexico.

The current show will be on view at Amagansett's The Crazy Monkey until December 1.

8 Mile, Far From Heaven

There are a million miles between two films clashing vividly at the moment. Surprisingly, they are both enjoying critical popularity by all movie mavens, even though they are as dissimilar as the tunes of Glen Miller and 'N Sync. Can you imagine us, the cute connoisseurs of cinema, all liking Far From Heaven and 8 Mile? Easy, as they are, both strongly operatic, though dressed as pop-pot boilers.

Far From Heaven, is richly styled with soft, ripe, saturated color and, the stiff taffeta rustle of 1950's Connecticut, middle-everything, soft, proper people bored stiff by repression. Made as a tribute to the 50s' classy director, Douglas Sirk, it reproduces his Technicolor, soap-like, melodramatic six-hankie, meticulous movies such as: this film's model, All That Heaven Allows and Imitation of Life. They went at women's hearts with dulled knives and forks from the wedding registries at Lord and Taylor.

Way down the road, in 1995 Detroit's grungy inner city called 8 Mile (it divides the dark city from the white suburb, Oakland County), lives Rabbit, portrayed by the rap star, Eminem, in what is purported to be his own story to date. It is as darkened and down-trodden as the city, but the white rapper's hard success story is given a soulful, optimistic, light endowed by a good script, untidily neat direction and Eminem's own embodiment of a sensitive vulnerability that belies the rap artist's cult-favoring platinum hair, gaudy tattoos and hate rhymings.

Wisely, L.A. Confidential's director, Curtis Hanson, walks his movie slowly, with scalding hopelessness, through the mean streets where black and white young people try to voice the dispossessed franchise that they've inherited. Rap music appears to be the way. When in the end, rage is expressed in a Rap Contest, the audience is given a great moment.

Contrasting 8 Miles' grey zone, director-writer, Todd Haynes and photographer Edward Lachman, go Far From Heaven to create an artifice of beauty. The reality is provided by the audience as it's seduced into a picture-perfect life. Steadfast actor, Julianne Moore's, bouffant sprayed hair is as crisp as her outfits and her matronly, housekeeping expertise for the right carpet color. But, every correct coloration can turn terribly lurid after cocktail parties. Her drinking husband, Dennis Quaid, performing in a ragingly fearless manner, will be found out. His revealed torment leads her into a close friendship with their black gardener, Dennis Haysbert, which in 1957 was horrific. And this film is so sensitively done, simple things can be escalated brutally. The characters, all seemingly waxen, grow powerfully into full-blooded human beings. The archetypes of the past, that still haunt us, become ghosts as pale and painful as the original gardener in 1955's Heaven, Rock Hudson.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major Film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey

ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

Far From Heven (+)

The first 15 minutes of this film reminded me of The Truman Show. Both films take place in the 50s when everyone's language was prim and proper and the cars with tailfins were as big as tanks.

We meet sales executive Frank Whitaker (Dennis Quaid), his wife Cathy (Julianne Moore) and their adolescent son and daughter. They live in Hartford, Connecticut, and appear to be the ideal family. But all is not perfect. Frank, a repressed homosexual, is arrested for loitering for sexual purposes and denies the allegation to his wife who is called by the police. Thus begins the saga of the efforts to save their marriage.

Frank's psychiatrist tells him that only five to thirty percent of those seeking help to become totally heterosexual are successful. Cathy, who desperately wants to save their marriage, is occasionally rejected by Frank – on one occasion he strikes her. When tested in his relationships with other homosexual males, he fails in his resolution to save their marriage. Without realizing what is happening, Cathy is drawn to her black gardener, Raymond (Dennis Haysbert). He is a very sensitive and understanding young man whose wife has died, leaving him with a six-year-old precocious daughter.

The flick has two themes: the repressed homosexuality of a married man and the bigotry of the City of Hartford directed toward blacks who, in the 50s, were called Negroes. Hartford today has an overwhelmingly black population, but was primarily white in the 50s. The movie conveys that a social relationship at that time between a white and a black individual would have placed the white in a difficult situation and the black person in a dangerous one.

Before entering the theater, I asked five people what they thought of the film. The responses were: "Excellent," "Good," "You will love it," "so-so," and "I didn't like it." I thought it was first-rate and well worth seeing. The acting by everyone is excellent, and the movie is beautifully crafted with great attention paid to details including locales, dress, hairstyles, language and room interiors. It's not as good as the English film on the same subject, The Lost Language of Cranes, but as Shakespeare said, "Striving to better, oft we mar what's well."

Before ed Koch was a film critic for Dan's Papers he was the mayor of New York City.

Dan's Papers They Made The Movie Here Film Festival 2002

MASQUERADE

Southampton College's presentation of Dan's Papers' "They Made The Movie Here" FREE Film Festival continues to warm up the College's Duke Hall where, at 2 p.m. on Saturdays, films bearing the likeness of our photogenic neighborhoods ignite the screen. Last week, extra heat was stoked-up by the appearance and discussion by special guest, Eugene "Gene" Kelly, the HBO Producer of films like the Emmy winning, Band of Brothers (with Tom Hanks and Steven Speilberg as Executive Producers.) Also there for the screening of, The Dain Curse, was its Supervising Film Editor, Murray Solomon. How about that? And, it all comes as a Free Gift (to borrow the advertising redundancy).

This week's movie is Masquerade, a romantic suspense thriller and kissy-kissy-poo fun. The title Masquerade is another grammatical discrepancy because, though it covers veiled identities, it also (in more advertising jargon) lays bare wicked, wretched lives and naked tanned bodies, looking very blush-plush, especially as displayed against the florid backgrounds of flush Southampton estates and lush John Barry music. Even Shelter Island looks kind-of like Florida.

It's a splashy mix of swanky yacht racing and nasty poor-boy competitions to get the poor little rich girl and her liquid funds. It unzips passion and defrocks vulgarities to clobber and distance itself from its relationship to the gentility of Alfred Hitchcock's 1941, Suspicion, starring Cary Grant as the handsome lug who loves his wife, but, oh, that dowry.

The 1985 Masquerade gives us the handsome, baby-faced Rob Lowe, looking premature as the most knowledgeable and best boating captain and lover on the East Coast. Arriving in the Hamptons under the cloud of a shady past, seaman Lowe quickly has women going overboard for him. There's the yacht owner's wife who likes him buck-naked, for her eyes only (and, of course, the movie audience). Kim Cantrall portrays her without flinching when using naughty words and therefore, can get things off her chest easily, especially articles of clothing. Many other women's eyes turn to Rob's butt, but he turns to the young orphan with millions and a greedy, live-in step-father, and a local policeman who's loved her for years. Meg Tilly is theyoing, love starved young lady and is tearfully spunky and believable.

From this point on the movie has more twists than a raspberry Twizzler and can get stretched even thinner. But, cloyingly sweet, thin or twisting itself into self-demolishing turns, it does take hold of you and push you into many surprises, what with: yachting, talk of faulty propane hoses, sex, terms of the will spelled out, sex, evil conniving (in Amagansett's Lunch diner, yet!), more sex, murder, marriage, suicide, a red Ferrari, and so on.

The director, Bob Swain, and screenwriter, Dick Wolf, were not much interested in the psychological character probing that gave depth to Hitchcock's glossy pictures. Masquerade is polished but not reflective. Even the Hamptons look too finger-printless. Pretty polishing dulls the sharp jaggedness this kind of movie should have. For instance, John Barry's opulent score just doesn't have the edge that Bernard Herrmann's music gave to Hitchcock films.

Finally, the camera spends almost as much time on Rob Lowe's bare tush as it does on some supporting actors. There are many highs in the movie but, one gets the idea that his bottom is the real Lowe in the movie.

Naturally, Masquerade is rated R. You know this wild and wooly Hampton crowd. The cheeky entertainment starts at 2 p.m. Saturday November 23 in Chancellors Hall, the new building at the main parking area. I am your host, Guy de Fraumeni. Along with Sarah Halsey and perhaps a special guest, we'll enjoy talk, refreshments and, very fresh entertainment.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major Film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

To brine or not to brine? That is a question that many cooks preparing Thanksgiving dinner will be asking themselves this coming week. No matter how much marinating and basting one does turkey, a lean meat, has suffered even further when recommended temperatures suggest the bird be cooked to 180 degrees. It isn't necessary to cook the bird beyond 160 degrees for the breast and 170 for the thighs. When pulled from the oven the temperature will continue to climb another 5 degrees or so. When cooking any meat, juices tend to come up to the surface and that is why many recipes suggest the meat rest about 15-20 minutes to allow redistribution of juices before carving. (It will also be easier to slice.)

No matter how you decide to marinate, season or cook your turkey brining is a very good idea. Brine is a solution of salt and water, which helps to ensure moist and juicy results. Brines have come a long way with additions of sugar or honey, citrus juices, fresh herbs to enhance flavor. Turkeys are big birds and must be completely submerged in the brine in a large pot. But, unless you can clear space in your refrigerator or have a second one handy this may not be practical. Or you can place the turkey in a large clean plastic garbage bag with the brine solution and turn it several times. The bird should be submerged at least 24 hours before cooking. If you do brine, be sure to rinse the turkey well and dry it thoroughly with paper towels before cooking.

I would like to add that some folks I know will deep-fry their turkey and that is another whole issue. Having the proper equipment is only part of it. The weather must comply unless you have a commercial ventilation system. Frankly if the weather complies I will barbecue my turkey. Twice now I've had barbecued turkey at the home of friends Barbara and Paul Freiberg of Noyac. And it is far and away the best turkey I have ever had. Wishing you a thankful Thanksgiving.

TO BRINE THE TURKEY

Start with a fresh or (if frozen) completely thawed bird. Salt and water are a must for soaking the turkey Add herbs to enhance flavor. Can adapt the recipe to your preference

Brine for a 12-14 pound turkey

2 gallons water
2 cups coarse (kosher) salt
1 cup sugar
Fresh sprigs of parsley, thyme, rosemary and sage
1 tablespoon mustard seeds
1 tablespoon fennel seeds
1 cinnamon stick
2 large bay leaves
1 tablespoon black peppercorns
1 teaspoon whole allspice
1 tablespoon fennel seeds
Juice of 1 large lemon

1. Place 2 gallons of water in a large stockpot, plastic tub or cooler large enough to hold the turkey. Bring to the boil over high heat. Remove from heat and add the remaining ingredients. Stir to mix and let cool completely.

2. Add the turkey to the brine. It should be completely submerged or with its breast side down in a tub. Cover and refrigerate for 24 hours.

3. Lift the turkey from the brine and discard the brine. Rinse the turkey under cold running water then dry very well with paper towels. Season the turkey as desired and let it come to room temperature before roasting. Follow the recipe of your choice for cooking the turkey.

MAPLE GLAZED TURKEY

Add the maple syrup to the basting ingredients in the last 30-40 minutes of roasting.

Serves 12-14

1 18-20 pound turkey
Coarse kosher salt and freshly ground pepper
2-3 large shallots, finely chopped
2 tablespoons minced fresh rosemary
1/4 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter at room temperature
2 cups chicken stock
1/2 cup applejack or Calvados
1 cup maple syrup

1. Rinse turkey inside and out with cold water and pat dry with paper towels. Rub bird with a sprinkle of salt and pepper inside and out. Mix garlic, rosemary and butter to a paste and season the bird all over. Refrigerate, covered, with a tent of plastic wrap up to 24 hours.

2. The next day, remove turkey from refrigerator and bring to room temperature before roasting. Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Place a doubled square of dampened cheesecloth over the bird and place breast side up, in a shallow roasting pan just large enough to fit the turkey. You may scatter some vegetables, such as onions, carrots and parsnips under the bird if desired. Reduce oven heat to 325 degrees and roast for 16 minutes to the pound. If the turkey begins to brown quickly tent the bird with foil, shiny side down.

3. Baste turkey with mixture of stock and liqueur every 20 minutes or so until 30-40 minutes before the turkey is done. Add maple syrup to the basting ingredients and continue to baste frequently until the bird is browned and the juices in the inner thigh run clear when pricked. An instant meat thermometer thrust into the thickest part (without touching the bone) should register about 160 degrees at the breast and 165 at the thigh. Transfer turkey to a carving board and let rest for 15-20 minutes before carving.

TURKEY ON THE GRILL

Barbara Freiberg adapted the recipe below from Weber's Big Book of Grilling, Chronicle Books. A covered-kettle style grill with temperature control, indirect medium heat and a drip pan is necessary for grilling a turkey.

Serves 8-10

12-14 pound turkey, giblets removed
2 onions, peeled and left whole
2 peeled and cored apples
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves
Extra-virgin olive oil
Juice of whole lemon
Chicken broth and dry white wine for basting

1. Prepare your grill. Rinse turkey inside and out under cold water and apt dry with paper towels. Put the onions and apples into the turkey cavity and tie the legs to secure them. Rub the bird with salt, pepper and thyme. Coat the turkey all over with oil and lemon juice.

2. Light the coals and arrange in even mounds on each side of the bottom rack. Place a large foil drip pan centered between the coals. Bring temperature to 350 degrees. Place the seasoned turkey on the upper rack over the drip pan. Cover and cook the turkey about 11 minutes per pound maintaining the grill temperature. Baste frequently with a mixture of broth and wine, about 2 cups each. Check the turkey after the first hour. If any parts are getting to dark, cover with a tent of foil. Continue basting the turkey every 20 minutes or so. The turkey is done when the internal temperature of the thickest part of the thighs is 165 degrees. Transfer turkey to a carving board and let rest for 15-20 minutes before carving.

3. For gravy, if desired, put the giblets from the turkey cavity, sans liver, into a saucepan with a 6 cups cold water with chunks of onion, carrot, celery, a bay leaf and some peppercorns. Bring to a boil and let simmer for about an hour and strain. Combine broth with degreased drippings from the drip pan, and some white wine if desired, and reduce to about 1 1/2 cups. Season to taste with salt and pepper, add chopped parsley and keep warm.

The Maidstone Arms

207 Main Street, East Hampton
631-324-5006

The Maidstone Arms, with its wonderful location looking out over the Village Pond and Green in this, one of the most beautiful villages in the country, used to be looked at by many as a place where one might go just on special occasions such as birthdays or anniversaries. Some even felt it to be slightly stuffy and unwelcoming unless you were a member of a select group of regular clientele.

Since they bought the inn a few years ago, Coke Ann Wilcox and her husband Jarvis have gently set out to change this perception and have brought together a new management team who share their desire to make the Maidstone Arms more accessible and flexible so that visitors may as well call in for a simple snack as for a gourmet meal.

Diane McIngvale is the Inn Keeper (or general manager), with co-managers Cynthia Gattie and Philippe Saurier. Paul Del Favero, the new Executive Chef, trained in Paris, cooked for three years around France, went to London and opened one of Sir Terence Conran's top restaurants and then came back to New York before spending seven years at Nick & Toni's and then at Henry's in Bridgehampton. He is a devotee of food which has a Mediterranean influence but which makes full use of local ingredients and is not fussy or complicated, 'What you see is what you get,' he explained with a smile 'A bit of Cote D'Azur mixed with some California'

The ambience of the whole establishment is immediately friendly, elegant, warm and relaxing. The wine list has consistently won the Wine Spectator Award of Excellence but to me even more important, it contains bottles of wine to suit all palates, all pockets. Very drinkable wines at $20 a bottle are there as well as one of the world's most expensive Burgundies at just over $2300 a bottle! The wines by the glass are consistently good.

We started with a tasting portion of a risotto prepared with wild mushrooms, Swiss chard and white truffle oil and this told us that Paul believes in bringing out the full flavors of his ingredients but leaving them clean and inviting. The risotto was superb and this is a dish like a good wine where the flavors build and linger on the palate. The presentation of delicately seared foie gras with a baked heirloom apple and an excellent apple balsamic reduction could not have been bettered, another dish for lovers of tastes and textures.

One of Paul's specialties is salt cod and shrimp cakes with a pungent garlic tartare sauce. Salt cod is often underappreciated and if not of excellent quality can be too strong a taste for many but here the cod did not overwhelm the more subtle shrimp and the final result was an interesting change from the ubiquitous crab cakes.

The use of local and seasonal foods is a constant theme within the menu and being autumn it was natural that mushrooms of all types should feature prominently. The wild mushroom salad should be a must for fungi lovers. The delicate base of mixed field greens perfectly dressed with a good hazelnut sherry vinaigrette blended with the warm mushrooms and toasted pine nuts and were beautifully accented by slivers of dry Serrano ham.

Paul presents a relatively small but extensive selection of main courses and we chose a grilled whole loup de mer with firm white flesh and full of light delicate taste and a hearty double venison chop served with an intense juniper berry sauce that I must admit I find an essential accompaniment to this very special meat. Both of these dishes deepened our appreciation of Paul's culinary style. Among the other dishes featured were porcini crusted halibut; pan roasted red snapper, wild king salmon, braised Niman ranch pork chops and rib eye steak. The inn's owners are vegetarians so don't be afraid to request a vegetarian choice if one is not on the menu.

For a taste of the desserts we chose a classic crème brulee which was perfect in texture, caramelization and taste and a selection of home made sorbets and ice creams. These showcased the talents of pastry chef Molly Harding and with a cafetiere of excellent coffee brought a memorable meal to a pleasant close.

As part of the style change, there now is a very pleasant Boat Bar & Bistro serving appropriate dishes throughout the day. By the way, for beer lovers who often get left out with all the discourse about wine; here they have a selection of international beers to delight the most ardent lover of real ale.

Appetizers range from $7 to $16; Main courses from $26 to $34; Desserts $8.50. Prix fixe is $29 for three courses.

Recommendation: The Maidstone Arms is a restaurant to be enjoyed at every possible opportunity whether you desire a full meal or a lighter bistro type offering. In every season it has an appropriateness that is very special. The staff are warm, friendly and knowledgeable and the food ranks among the very best on Long Island. This is one of the few restaurants where I would gladly drive a long way for a meal.

Side Dish

By Aji Jones

George Martin in Southampton is now booking for holiday parties. The restaurant is available on Sunday and Monday evenings and on weekday afternoons.

Babette's in East Hampton has added some new dishes to their lunch menu. They are as follows: specialty soups prepared to order – "a meal in itself" (Manhattan clam chowder, truffle shrimp, lobster bisque – choices change daily), broccoli, turkey bacon and fontina tart (includes a side salad/soup) and grilled Portobello panini with salad.

Gianni's Bar & Grill in Montauk offers a $12.95 prime rib special on Friday evenings. Located at the site of the former Caswells, Gianni's offers an affordably priced, Italian-influenced menu. Dinner is served from 5 to 10 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Della Femina in East Hampton will host a wine dinner Sunday, November 24 at 7 p.m. featuring wines from the North Fork's Bedell Cellars. The cost is $65 per person, excluding tax and gratuity. For the evening, chef James Carpenter has created a special menu with selective wine pairings.

Seats are still available for the Lenz Winery vintner's dinner on Friday, November 22 at The Plaza Café in Southampton. For those who appreciate fine wines and great food, this dinner is a unique opportunity. The cost of the dinner, which begins at 6:30 p.m., is $90 excluding tax and gratuity. The menu for the evening will feature pairings of chef Doug Gulija's dishes with complementary Lenz wines selected by Lenz' artisan winemaker Eric Frye, who will also present the evening's program.

The Seventh Annual Cornell Research Wine Tasting Benefit will be held Friday, December 6 from 7 to 9 p.m. at Raphael Winery Estate in Peconic. This year, for the first time, the event will sponsor the First Annual Long Island Rare Wine Auction. This auction will feature rare wines from previous Long Island vintages, many of which have not been available for years. Also included will be hard to find archive selections from premium local producers, as will as rare large format bottle releases. The suggestion donation for admission is $50. For further information, contact Linda Lynch at Cornell Cooperative Extension, 631-727-7850, ext. 341.

Water Mill Square is offering a prix fixe menu on Thursday and Sunday that includes an entrée, a choice of appetizer or salad, and dessert.

More East End options are available for your Thanksgiving dining plans… The Maidstone Arms will have Thanksgiving a prix fixe dinner available for $70 per person with seatings at 1:00, 3:00, 5:00 and 7:00 p.m. Pierre's in Bridgehampton will be serving from noon to midnight. Sample menu include pumpkin soup, sea bass flambé, roasted turkey with apple stuffing, caramelized yams, baked Alaska and a choice of homemade pies and tortes…Gurney's Inn in Montauk is offering an eclectic Thanksgiving menu that includes traditional roast turkey, Cajun style deep fried turkey, prime rib, Chilean sea bass, roast Long Island duckling and live lobster. There are some healthy, low fat and vegetarian choices as well as a children's menu… The Wild Goose in Cutchogue will be serving Thanksgiving dinner and if the hunting trip goes well then the turkeys will be truly wild!

Turkey trimmings can be found at Razzano's located in Bridgehampton and also in Port Washington.

Food & Co is taking Thanksgiving orders until November 23. Their extensive menu includes sage roasted whole turkey with giblet gravy, Cornish hens with kale, bacon and cashew stuffing, filet of beef with wild mushroom jus and poached salmon with sauce vert.

Need desserts for your feast? Tate's Bake Shop has a Thanksgiving selection of over eighteen pies, including apple crumb, blueberry, cherry, chocolate chip, mincemeat, pecan, peach crumb, pumpkin, raspberry peach crumb, strawberry rhubarb and many more!

Gin Lane

1020 Montauk Highway, Watermill
631-726-7585

I passed by Gin Lane Lounge and Restaurant a hundred times this summer. While I knew it was a new addition to the culinary quilt of the South Fork, I couldn't get it out of my head that it hadn't been there for years. Gin Lane just fits.

True, the building has been there for a while. But beyond its edifice, Gin Lane's atmosphere and menu already feel established and experienced. Thoughtfulness has gone into placing a luscious white rose on every table. The menu offers a list of tried and true dishes that entice the appetite then stun the devourer with surprises at every bite.

A new restaurant can rarely pull this off with elegance. But Gin Lane, which opened last spring, is smooth. If there were any kinks to work out, co-owners Jim Colbert and Chef John Hamilton are stealthy magicians.

GIN LANE

Chef Hamilton wielded his magic when we dined on a treacherous Sunday night, during the tail end of a weekend monsoon. The glow of flickering candles on cream colored walls helped sooth the chill out of my companion and I, and two glasses of Silverstone Cabernet Sauvignon finished the trick.

A basket of homemade breads and a mild-flavored olive oil for dipping staved off hunger as we combed the menu. Our server guided us through the choices as well as the daily specials with expertise, and she never wavered throughout the evening.

We decided on the baja wontons and the shrimp tempura for appetizers. Not too extraordinary for modern eclectic cuisine? Oh contraire. Biting into the wontons, our taste buds were smothered in warm cream cheese and pureed jalapenos, soothed by a velvety tomatillo sauce. I was delighted to find the tempura batter light around the shrimp and the spicy-sweet ponzu chili dipping sauce an irresistible accompaniment.

At the recommendation of our server, we tried two special salads for the evening. My companion received a refreshing combination of baby arugala, sliced melon, prosciutto and shaved parmesan. I indulged in baby spinach dressed in a light creamy vinaigrette and accompanied by the outstanding, if somewhat shocking, pair of pecan-crusted blue cheese medallions and frozen red grapes.

Chef Hamilton was clearly tickled when he heard our excitement over the frozen grapes and blue cheese. The grapes were the product of the latest experiment, he said, in his ongoing quest to create adventurous cuisine.

Chef Hamilton brings experience from the tables of Hawaii. Pacific influence was evident in our entrees. I chose tender, succulent bay scallops clustered in a pool of sweet soy glaze. My companion opted for the striped bass topped with crushed pistachios and accompanied by a ginger sauce.

Chef Hamilton capped off the night with a special dessert of caramelized banana slices in caramel sauce with a globe of creamy vanilla—a nice take on bananas foster without the tableside flaming hoopla.

And therein lies the key to the success of Gin Lane (in the presentation, not the bananas). Jim and John aren't looking for fanfare. "We don't want to be a high-end destination," said Chef Hamilton. "We want to be in the community." That's why he created a special grill menu offering BBQ brisket sandwiches and fried shrimp po' boys, he noted. People are welcome to come in for a four-course meal or just a juicy sandwich hot off the grill.

Whatever you decide to eat at Gin Lane, be assured you'll be coming back for more. –Nicole Cotroneo

A Brief History Of Makeup

Lipstick, eye shadow, foundation, eyeliner, lip liner, mascara, powder, and blush. The pains that women go through to look great are no new task, and while companies are constantly come up with the latest and best innovations of eyeshadow and lip gloss (lipstick that doesn't fade!), make-up is hardly a novel phenomenon. Believe it or not, ladies have been doing the same routine for thousands and thousands of years. Perhaps our penchant for Chanel, MAC, Stila, et al is so ingrained in us that it has become innate.

It all started with the Egyptians. They were a sophisticated culture responsible not just for mammoth pyramids, but also for inventions like hair dye, eyeliner, and blush. A green copper paste was applied to the face to define color and features, and kohl, a concoction of sheep's fat and powdered lead, was used to paint on eyebrows. Blood was used to dye the hair black. People were concerned with their appearances and body odor. They had perfume in the form of scented oils.

The progression of cosmetics continued in various cultures around the world. Circa 1500 BC, in China and Japan, white faces were achieved by using rice powder paint. Hair was dyed with Henna.

Five hundred years later, the Romans took cosmetics to a new level. They kept powders and blush in little cases and even had lipstick in the form of ochre. Plautus famously stated that "A woman without paint is like food without salt." In Medeival times, women went so far as to bleed themselves to get that fair-skinned look. 13th century women began using lipstick as a status symbol, the synthetic red dye indicating that they could afford luxuries.

Medieval women weren't the only ones risking their health for beauty. The Greeks' blonde hair dye was so strong it often rendered people bald (making wigs a popular choice). Women in the 14th and 15th centuries used lead-based make-up that caused illness, paralysis and even death. It wasn't until the 1800's that a new form of make-up, zinc oxide, replaced the old lead formulas. But even then, lead and other poisonous substances were used in eyeshadows and lipsticks. Finally, in the 1940s, aluminum chloride became widely used and ended the problems of severe skin irritation.

Beginning in the 1600 and 1700s, women began freely using lipstick and blush. The French were especially fond of their make-up. The revolution came in 1917, when Theda Bera, a silent film actress, appeared onscreen wearing loads of Helena Rubenstein's make-up. Since then, Hollywood has been linked to the cosmetics industry. And the 1920s brought dime stores, making cosmetics available and affordable for women all over the United States. Red lipstick was soon an American woman's staple. In 1935, Max Factor opened his store on Hollywood and Highland and developed the line, which he originally created for film actresses. His cosmetics advanced the popularity and accessibility of make-up for the average woman, not just the stars.

Since the 1930s, make-up has followed trends, varying from heavy-handed eyeliner in the 60s to the "natural" look of the 70s. Tanning, as opposed to the pale face, became popular in the 50s, spawning self-tanning products. Self-tanners were created during WW II as "leg make-up" when stockings were in short supply. And now, with concern over healthy skin and the effects of sundamage, women are more interested in either a fairer complexion or a synthetic tan.

Today, the cosmetics industry is valued at over 20 billion dollars and continues to entice women to buy products that promised to improve upon their features. We don't use the blood of goats as hair dye anymore, and we consider bleeding ourselves archaic, but certainly someday in the future, a woman will look back at our sparkling eyeshadows, the plethora of eyeliner colors, and our varieties of red lipstick (not to mention things like that notion of "permanent make-up" that can be tattooed onto your face) and all the waxing and hair dying and fixing of features – and wonder what we were thinking. But for now, we know what makes us feel beautiful –Rachel May

Locks Of Love

With an abundance of organizations that support good causes to choose from, the Markowski sisters, from the Scott J. Aveda Salon in Bridgehampton, decided to get involved in the "Locks for Love" foundation.

October was Cancer Awareness month and Marie Markowski asked her sister to cut thirteen inches off her hair and donate it to "Locks for Love," which is a wonderful organization that uses human hair to make wigs for children who have lost hair from cancer and other diseases. Diane Markowski-Lindley has contributed her talent at the lingerie fashion show held at the Publick House for the Breast Coalition for the past five years. And Marie Markowski has donated her amazing updos for the fashion show for the past two years as well.

I decided to log on to the "Locks for Love" website to find out further information about this foundation. Their were so many sites to check out pertaining to this worthy cause that it was difficult to select one. I scanned through an endless array of testimonials from people who have donated their hair or had been a recipient of the foundation. They are some of the most touching and inspiring stories that you will read. It holds true that doing for others can be one of the most rewarding experiences in life. Those of us who are fortunate enough to be healthy and blessed to have healthy children should see this as the inspiration to get involved and give what you can to any cause that strikes a chord in your heart.

Both sisters are dedicated to their craft and the compassion they have for others in need. Diane and Marie are well versed when it comes to hair care. They specialize in highlighting, color and cutting.

During my visit to Aveda, Diane gave me a highlift blonde to add some brightness for the winter. Aveda color products are derived from plant extracts that are made from castor and jojoba oils, which are very conditioning and leave your hair soft and managable. She also used and recommended the Brilliant shampoo and conditioner that works well with color treated, permed and textured hair. As always, the Aveda products leave your hair smelling delicious and leaves it feeling soft and silky.

With the holiday season approaching, many of us have much to be thankful for and, if you're in the position to help others, I believe you should become active in any capacity possible. The distractions of our every day schedules, commitments, bills and family obligations can make us lose focus on what really matters.

I can only imagine how difficult it must be for a child who battles a life threatening disease compounded with all the side effects it leaves such as hair loss.

"It's very important that we all stick together and donate what we can," said Diane Markowski.

-Kelly Marcioch

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

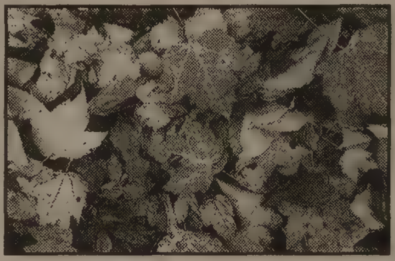
It is not often that I am asked to speak on behalf of Long Island's agricultural state of affairs however, last Thursday I spoke before the New York State of Economic Development Academy in Corning, NY on the subject of marketing for our region. It was an honor to be asked to update the attendees on our progress, our successes and our trials. As economic developers around the state look for new ideas and engaging projects, the seminars are a way of enlightening interested individuals; and the hope is that they will walk away with a spark, a new approach, a hot project or perhaps a more open mind.

Long Island is rather unique in the state of New York, in that we are somewhat isolated from the rest of the counties upstate, which has traditionally forced our growers to be creative, flexible and full of pride. As New York State's number one agricultural county in gross dollar sales, Suffolk County continues to be a test case for many things. Most recently it has been because of land use issues, and before that it was changing market products to meet consumer demand. Being a farmer on Long Island means knowing what will sell today and forecasting what will be hot next year or the year after that. No doubt, it's a talent! And truth be told, it appears Long Island growers do that better than most.



In the early 1980s, the "Grown on Long Island" logo was patented by Long Island Farm Bureau and made available free of charge to members on a voluntary basis as a means of identifying and setting apart locally grown agricultural products. But the belief was that in time, it would help to unify the many different ag products grown here and bolster regional pride. The logo was made available to auxiliary businesses as well (transportation/supermarkets, etc.). Today, many ag businesses have incorporated this identifiable signature in partnership with their own corporate logos. Perhaps you've noticed that a few of the employees of our charming farmstands wear the "Grown of Long Island" T-shirt as a kind-of uniform and the trucks delivering local flowers display the signs along with the company name.

Aside from advertising efforts, promoting agritourism and attending food events, fairs and festivals, growers here on Long Island also make the time and considerable effort to become involved in town and community affairs. I explained how important having Local Affairs Committees and Agricultural Advisory Committees are to the business of farming. They allow for farmers to get involved in the decision making process where it affects them, their families and their very visible means of support close to home. Times have changed a lot since the days when a farm family would and could remain inaccessible and autonomous, separated by time and distance. Now the concepts of economic development, stewardship, smart growth and energy maintenance have weight and true impact. The business of agriculture must have a voice if it is to remain on the community radar as important, worthwhile and contributory.

It was a satisfying afternoon for me to see nodding heads, smiling faces and curious expressions as I moved from one concept to the next. I feel that these opportunities are important for us to share and to hear new ideas because we are all looking toward the same end; how do we keep a viable economy that includes all industry while having the least detrimental effect on our precious environment? This is a cause for celebration to know that those who make impact-full decisions for us all are hungry for useful information that will allow them to think with the future in mind and our well being at heart.

This will be the last article for the year for East End Farming. We look forward to starting up again in the spring. Enjoy your winter.

Police Blotter

An aggravated 16-year-old boy was arrested on Fords Lane in Southampton on August 24. Eyewitnesses told police they saw him kick in the front, passenger side quarter panel of a parked car. He was charged with misdemeanor criminal mischief in the fourth degree, which will most likely prevent him from graduating Auto Body School this fall.

Last Friday night in Southampton Village, Village Police said a man touched a woman without her permission. He was subsequently arrested and charged with forcibly touching.

Another touching incident in Southampton last Tuesday caused a Southampton woman to call the Town Police. At about 7:20 p.m. she was driving on Cold Spring Pond Road and saw a man, who appeared to be in his late 20's with dark hair, standing naked on the side of the road masturbating. The woman told police that, before the incident, she thought she saw the man drive past her several times in a red Jeep.

An East End motel was the sight of some criminal activity last week. According to police, a burglar entered through the unlocked window of a room at a Riverside motel. The perpetrator made off with some aromatic booty including a bottle of Armani cologne, a knapsack, and some clothing. Police have taken no one into custody for the thefts, but are trying to smell out a well-dressed and well-traveled suspect.

On Ford's Lane in Tuckahoe, Police responded to a call from a resident in need of some minor lawn care. The woman reported that someone unknown to her had doused her lawn with some sort of chemical, in turn killing the grass. Police gathered that the turf terrorist attempted to spell something.

Police were called to a Sag Harbor residence last Saturday in response to the homeowner's complaint. The man said he had left some items on his front lawn for a friend to pick up. Police reported that sometime between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. an unknown suspect(s) removed the items totaling $1600.

Don't bogart that police report man... A store in Montauk was cleared of over $700 worth of glass and wooden pipes, glass bongs and condoms. The heist took place last Monday, no suspects are known at this time.

A bus driver for the Springs School in East Hampton reported to police that someone stole four fire extinguishers from different buses. The crime was committed sometime between last Sunday and Wednesday.

Dan's Letters

SHAREHOUSE SOUND-OFF

Dear Dan,

Thank you for the great article on group protest in Dan's Papers in September.

Here is the protest I send to you in hope that I can enjoy the house that I worked so hard for in order to buy. It is so unfair.

The problem house is 80A West Tiana Road, Hampton Bays, and the owner rents to five people on the lease who bring twenty more people to the house. The music starts in the afternoon and throughout the night. They also have car horns going, loud voices, screaming. The taxi Company also blows their horns through the night when they go to the house to pick up people.

The police are limited because of the laws. You can't control how many people they sub lease to. The police are there all the time, but as soon as they leave it starts again. The owner of the house is Carrine Cormine. One of the Southampton town laws is that you need three people in different house to protest against the rental house. That is ridicules, if in my house I live with a family of three people all three should count.

Then we need to go to court, two days out of work if you live in New York City and work.

Why should a landlord make all this money and take away our pleasure? I am still paying a mortgage. The red tape is too much. I think the broker and the landlord must own up to the problem.

Dan, thank you again

Francine Berkowitz

SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT

Dear Dan,

A friend recently sent me a copy of your paper dated July 19, 2002 that had an article written by Jerry Cimisi entitled Warhol in Montauk. Since "Churches" had been my family home and where I had spent every summer until the place was sold, I was thrilled to get the paper, that is until I read it. There are so many discrepancies. My grandfather built the houses from 1931-32 – not 1920 – we have never lived in Idaho – and the selling price is also wrong.

Recently a book titled Beach Houses by Roberto Schezen (photography and text by Michael Michael Webb). The information concerning our former home in this book is actually 90% accurate.

Sandra Church Vander Lans
Fallbrook, California

We probably read the 10% as research for our article.

–D.R.

BEST OF THE BEST OF THE BEST

Dear Dan,

The Farmhouse has just won three 2002 "Best of the Best" awards which makes my total close to twenty since 1997 – the year we opened. Being a marketing and promotions person just like yourself, when I first won an award as "Best Restaurant" in 1997, I thought there must be a way to make it seem bigger than I actually thought the award was. In short, I didn't exactly put a Dan's Papers award on a very high pedestal and thought if I made it a personal big deal, it would become a bigger deal than my perception and therefore, my customers' perception. Thus I made special ads, announcements, etc.

As the years evolved I would say things in my newspaper ads like "Best Restaurant in the Hamptons 1997, 1998, 1999..."Dan's Papers. I thought I was creating my own panache. By the year 2000 I would notice a lot of other winners with their little Dan's Papers glass framed plaques hung on a wall, or near the cash register or even in the store front window. I mused to myself how could all these people display plaques like this.

Today everyone – including myself – seems to be displaying three awards, which it turns out, are perceived a big deal by all of these recipients. I have always had the attitude, from my tennis days (you remember those days) that if I tell enough people how good you are soon people will begin to believe you. And so, me the skeptic who took this little award and combined it with what I deemed my own personal promotional prowess, have gone from a semi-comical "well I'll take this Dan's Papers award and combine it with my talents and make a really big deal", to a person who has this very day, Monday, rescheduled my dentist appoint for Wednesday, which I have had for two months in new York, so as NOT to miss your awards photo session at your office tomorrow. Imagine that!

Years ago I taught sports marketing course at UC Irvine, a very good school in Irvine, California – a part of the California prestigious State College system. I would begin each class by stating in no uncertain terms that the best (by far) marketing promotion of all time is the airline "Frequent Flier" promotion, started by American Airlines and copied by the world.

Well, if I ever go back to teaching that course again, I think I would site the Dan's Papers "Best of the Best" awards – especially considering how grass roots it is here in the Hamptons – as the most creative and successful marketing idea I have ever seen! We all now take this so seriously that my only wish would be that you would cut out the "riffraff" by eliminating some of your often 'tongue-in-cheek' categories like "Best Pop Corn on North Main Street", etc., in order to make the other awards even more meaningful that we now make them.

Congratulations, and I mean that in all sincerity and I'm sorry that early on I did not recognize the genius in these awards and, by association, your genius.

Fred Lieberman
East Hampton

The best newspaper promotion since the beginning of time. –D.R

DAN'S THE MAN

Dear Dan,

Just in case no one told you this today, I want you to know: You're the best!

Here's why:

By all accounts, you made connection Day 2002 a phenomenal success.

Not only did you contribute your time and expertise to your panel; you made a great contribution to the Coalition as well as to Long Island. With connection day drawing more than 500 participants – many from upstate as well as from the tri-state area. You showcased the kind of talent and spirit that makes Long Island such a great place to work and live. Your efforts also resulted in some immediate success stories: NBC 4 aired two stories as a result of Connection Day... and more coverage by other media is in the works.

Thank you for making it a great day for so many people, the Coalition and the region.

WOW, WOMEN ON FIRE!

Dear Dan,

Thank you for such an insightful article about our music hall. We are so pleased to share its beauty and history. I certainly appreciate your take on our "radio play."

I hope you can join us for a performance of Women on Fire. There will be a preview for press on Wednesday, December 11, at 8 p.m. followed by performances Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday, December 15 at 2 p.m.

I am looking forward to reading your play!

"Encore."

— Pia Lindstrom, Theatre Critic

Praise from a theatre critic can mean the difference between success and failure, which is why they choose their words very carefully. So when Pia Lindstrom asked David Dominski to come back, and handle the additions to her home — it spoke volumes. ☐ David Dominski, a third-generation builder of prestigious homes on the East End, has been recognized by Architectural Digest and Home magazine. Amongst his clients he's known for remaining on-schedule and on-budget, take a long bow, David. Most impressive is his reputation for being on-site. Pia Lindstrom said he was always there. She didn't have to call, leave messages, and hope he'd call back. ☐ Architects like working with David and often recommend him as well because he breathes life into their boldest designs. You can contact David directly or have your architect make the call. ☐ Pia's favorite room: the custom arbor off the kitchen — a place to reflect. David's favorite feature: the kitchen's lofted ceiling with old English barn beams. By the way, Pia said David was also fun to have around …bravo!
